COUNTY FACES LONELY FIGHT AGAINST CARMEL LAWSUIT

Monterey County may stand alone in its defense against the lawsuit by the city of Carmel challenging its adoption of the new Carmel Valley Master Plan. The suit asks the county to set aside its adoption of the Master Plan until it prepares and considers an Environmental Impact Report. Such a report could affect the future of the proposed Rancho Canada Lodge and the Carmel Valley Ranch development, but the developers have not yet joined the county in its defense against the lawsuit. See page 6.

MINIBUS PROPOSAL BECOMES A POLITICAL FOOTBALL

It started as a simple question and developed into almost an hour of election season debate. Councilman Howard Brunn wondered aloud at the council meeting last Monday night whether the city could use the $173,000 in uncommitted city transportation funds for a minibus system. Councilman Mike Brown said that the City Council "looked at a minibus system three years ago and found it to be a grave mistake." Brunn and Brown then exchanged arguments on the issue. Both men are candidates for mayor. See page 4.

COUNTY PLANNERS APPROVE CV MASTER PLAN ORDINANCES

BROWN STUNS COASTAL COMMISSION WITH SECOND KITCHEN COMMENTS

Carmel City Councilman Mike Brown stunned the Regional Coastal Commission at the March 6 public hearing at City Hall when he stated that the council had drafted its policy on second kitchen units "because we knew you (the coastal commission) wanted to see some sort of policy — it was always hanging over our heads." See page 15.

Where lightning struck

"THUNDER AND LIGHTNIN'!" Wilma Blackman examines the splintered remains of a cypress tree, riven by a "savage crack of lightning" Wednesday, March 5. The tree was located on 16th Avenue near the Carmel River School. "It sounded like a huge plane hitting the building," exclaimed school secretary Jean Taylor. See page 7 for the story. Disagrees with lawsuit

Dear Editor:

It is with mixed feelings that I read about a pending lawsuit being formed against the city by a former police department employee and some unidentified individuals.

This would be concerning a so-called loss of time when she was required to report 15 minutes early in order to be briefed prior to any shift change.

As many of the old timers will remember, I served the city of Carmel for more than 38 years as a police officer, finally retiring as a Lieutenant of Police, Patrol Division.

I can very easily recall the 10-hour day and six-day week as a standard pattern of the work format. I fully realize that time marches on and things change for the better, however I do know that it was vital to report that 15 minutes early. During this time period, all personnel were made cognizant of what had happened on the previous shifts and what we could expect for the oncoming watch.

At no time were we concerned over this simple requirement. It meant too much for the officer's safety.

I cannot agree with Ms. Jonikas' feelings or beliefs. It would seem to me that if she knew of this particular requirement when she was hired, and I am sure that she did, she should have refused the position and sought work for some organization that would have required her to punch in and out on a time clock.

I served the city honorably for a long period of time and by the same token, I was treated fairly and well. I am proud to have been a member of such a splendid group and organization.

Unique opportunity

Dear Editor:

The voters of Carmel have a unique opportunity to bring real strength to what has proved to be a weak and devisive City Council.

You can elect Barney Laiolo as mayor. He is dedicated, hard working and committed to what is best for Carmel.

As mayor he promises to:

1. Work out a solution for library space needs.
2. Complete a walkway along Scenic Road which the Forestry Commission has long advocated.
3. Revise the criteria for the city permit review board to assure Carmel of high quality shops and preferably resident-oriented businesses.
4. Work out a better parking plan to relieve both downtown and residential congestion.
5. Carry out a plan for a much needed Public Works storage yard.
6. Work for the repeal of the ordinance allowing payment of salaries for city councilmen. This previously was turned down by the electorate 3-1.
7. Advocate a policy whereby a councilman cannot run for the mayor's office and, if defeated, still retain his council seat. The present policy has the effect of self-perpetuating the existing incumbents as well as loading the council with the effect of a clique.

'Citizens to be proud of'

Dear Editor: Larry Morago is not only interested in good government; he works for it.

I first met Larry when he was chairman of the Common Sense Committee for the petition which resulted in the citizens of Carmel rising in wrath to pass an ordinance to force the councilmen to keep their fingers out of the city administrator's assigned responsibilities.

The voters passed the ordinance by an overwhelming 80-plus percent.

The result assured any future city administrator that he would not be harassed in the performance of his duties as was Jack Collins by a meddling City Council.

I am happy to know that Morago has decided to run for one of the council seats. He possesses qualifications for common sense, intelligence, balance, confidence and a dedicated interest in good government. I recommend him for the position without reservations.

Larry Morago is a native Californian. He is chairman of the Woods School Site Council, chairman of the Carmel Unified School District Small Schools Committee, and a member of that group's Minimum Standards Committee.

He taught school for 15 years in Stockton where he was director of speech, chairman of the history department, and served on the advisory board. He is a graduate of Chico State College.

Larry also manages a farm he owns in Iowa.

It's a long story how his Spanish ancestors (one of whom occupied the commandant's position at the San Francisco Presidio) got involved with farmers in Iowa. You probably have seen Morago at the Carmel Lions Club booth at the County Fair where he did his share frying potatoes and preparing tacos. The proceeds from the booth go toward financing charitable projects, including the Peninsula Blind Center.

Larry Morago and his wife Cathy (they have two small daughters) are citizens that Carmel can be proud of. Larry deserves your vote for councilman in the coming election.

'Outstanding record'

Dear Editor:

Since the position of mayor of the city of Carmel has now become an elective office, it is of the greatest importance that a man capable of chairing the City Council in a calm, reasonable and effective manner be elected.

A long period of residence in Carmel is not a sufficient qualification for the mayoralty, although Barney Laiolo has lived in Carmel for 35 years.

Far more important is his outstanding record of community service. His entry into elective politics was preceded by an "apprenticeship" as a city planning commissioner where he learned the basics of planning and zoning so essential in a knowledge of city government. He was elected to the City Council, and served as both councilman and mayor, and did an outstanding job.

His knowledge of the city and its residents resulting from his years of operating Village Electric has given the community a deep feeling of trust and confidence in Barney as a man, with the assurance that he will give every problem a fair and unprejudiced hearing, and an honest decision.

The community is fortunate that Barney is willing to serve again, and its best interests will be served by electing him as its mayor.

The promoters at CV Ranch

By AL EISNER

WHEN THE FOLKS from Oklahoma presented their plans for a mammoth motel-golf course-condominium development at Carmel Valley Ranch, the community recoiled in horror. After years of acrimonious debate, though, Landmark Lands Company finally won approval for the first phase of condominium development — over the bodies of thousands of residents of Carmel and Carmel Valley.

Supervisor Sam Farr shepherded the controversial project through its approval and the Master Plan process. He made sure that the 400-500 condominium units were exempted from the allocation system in the new Carmel Valley Master Plan. After all, Sam argued, the poor developers had invested $4 million in the project and therefore deserved special consideration.

Furthermore, Sam assured us, Landmark was a "quality" developer, and would build a project that would serve as a model of good planning.

With the news that Landmark has sold the development rights for the first phase of condominium construction (see story on page 11) the whole sordid mess suddenly makes a lot of sense.

We will never know the full story, I suppose, but Landmark certainly reaped millions in the transaction. The luxury condos will sell for nearly $300,000 ... that means $40 million, in sales. And they still have a guarantee of an additional 260 to promote or sell later ... maybe even another 100 to promote and sell later ... plus a golf course and a 100-room motel, plus ... ad nauseum.

It seems pretty clear that the "quality" developers from Oklahoma are really a slick group of promoters who made a fast buck. And we, poor yokels, are going to get stuck with the pollution.

Minibuses are needed

THE CITY COUNCIL decided about a year ago to start a minibus system to relieve downtown congestion. It seemed that sanity had been restored — at least temporarily — to City Hall.

After ample discussion and debate, funds were budgeted for the 1979-80 year to make the buses a reality. The small buses would travel on east-west and north-south streets in paths that would bring them within a few blocks of every residence in Carmel.

It was reasoned that the minibuses would be a boon to Carmel's older citizens who can't drive automobiles. Because federal funds were available for the program, and because the city treasury was bulging with unspent surpluses, Carmel residents could even ride free, some argued.

The council agreed, further, that the intolerable parking and traffic situation downtown could be helped if the hundreds of people who drive their cars to work could, instead, park on the fringes of town and take a bus to the business district.

Finally, the thousands of tourists who drive their cars into the village every day could be given the option of taking a bus — for a small fee.

•

WHEN THE MATTER came up for discussion Monday night, though, Councilman Mike Brown argued petulantly against minibuses. He preferred a "dial-a-ride" taxicab system that would provide door-to-door red carpet service. Of course the service would be limited to Carmel residents (also known as voters).

The poor folks who operate businesses here and those unfortunate people who work in offices and shops in town would have to fend for themselves and continue to compete for the ever-diminishing number of parking spaces downtown.

Brown's chief argument is that a similar system failed in neighboring Pacific Grove. The popular "Butterfly buses" proved to be too expensive for the city. In Brown's simplistic view, therefore, the minibuses wouldn't work in Carmel.

There are, however, at least two important differences between Carmel and Pacific Grove.

Because of our thriving tourist trade, the $30,000-$35,000 annual operating costs could easily be absorbed in our swollen city budget. At this writing, a budget surplus of some $2 million is sitting in the bank. The interest on that sum — invested conservatively at 12 percent — would yield $240,000 per year ... far more than is needed to run a modest minibus system. We can afford it.

Brown's simplistic view also fails to take into account the vast difference in the parking situation in the two cities. Residents and shoppers in Pacific Grove can almost always park within sight of their destination. We need them. We can afford them. Let's get on with it before the idea is talked to death.

Exodus of service businesses feared

Carmel may lose its only electrical shop

By KEITH YATES

VILLAGE ELECTRIC, the only electrical supply and repair shop in Carmel, will probably "unplug" its business at Mission and Fourth and relocate to the entrance of Carmel Valley in May.

Owner Pete Tracey told the Pine Cone that his landlord — an officer of the Anita Doud Trust — won't renew his lease.

"We've been on a month-to-month basis for a year and a half," Tracey said. "We just couldn't work a deal with them on renewing the lease."

He said that a smaller shop for his company is under construction next to Stanley Appliance in the Carmel Rancho area.

"It will probably be ready for us to move into in May," Tracey said. "We'll have a lot less square footage out there. I hate to do it, but we'll probably have to drop small appliance repair for lack of space."

He said that his Mission and Fourth store has about 2,500 square feet. The new shop will have about 1,500 square feet," he said.

•

GEORGE BRUCATO, a Monterey accountant, and co-trustee with Crocker Bank of the Doud estate, told the Pine Cone that he was surprised to learn of Tracey's decision to move.

"As far as I know, it wasn't a dead issue," he said. "Last I heard, a bank was going to make a survey to determine the value of the property.

"There are a lot of things we haven't yet come to terms on, like the length of the lease, who makes the improvements, and the rent. This kind of throws me."

•

BRUCATO ADMITTED THAT he had ruled out a long-term lease for the building. "We don't want to tie up the property for 15 to 20 years. It is a short-term trust. When the property goes to the heirs, it wouldn't be right to have that property frozen up for years and years because of something done now.

"We were thinking along the lines of a five-year lease with an option to renew for another five years," Brucato said.

•

TRACEY'S DECISION TO move Village Electric out of the city comes at a time when other residentially-oriented businesses face uncertain futures.

In recent weeks, the Carmel Drive-In Market at Dolores and Eighth, the Carmel Village Theater on Dolores between Seventh and Eighth, and the Canton Restaurant on Ocean near Mission have been rocked by events that could make continuation of their businesses impossible.

The market, one of only three in the city, may have to close if a proposed rent hike by landlord Jeannette Ewing isn't brought "within reason," according to market owners Tony Costanza and Ratzi Aiello.

Costanza told the Pine Cone that the rent was initially set to increase 200 percent.

Ewing and the market owners say that they are now negotiating terms of a new lease.

Neither party would comment further.

•

THE VILLAGE THEATER may be razed for construction of a multi-level structure that would include retail shops on the ground floor and six apartments upstairs.

Ed Dickinson, part-owner of the theater, said earlier that he couldn't compete with the chain movie houses "which can take a bath on a couple of films, where we can't."

Plans for the new structure were submitted to the Carmel Planning Commission for concept approval at its Feb. 20 meeting.

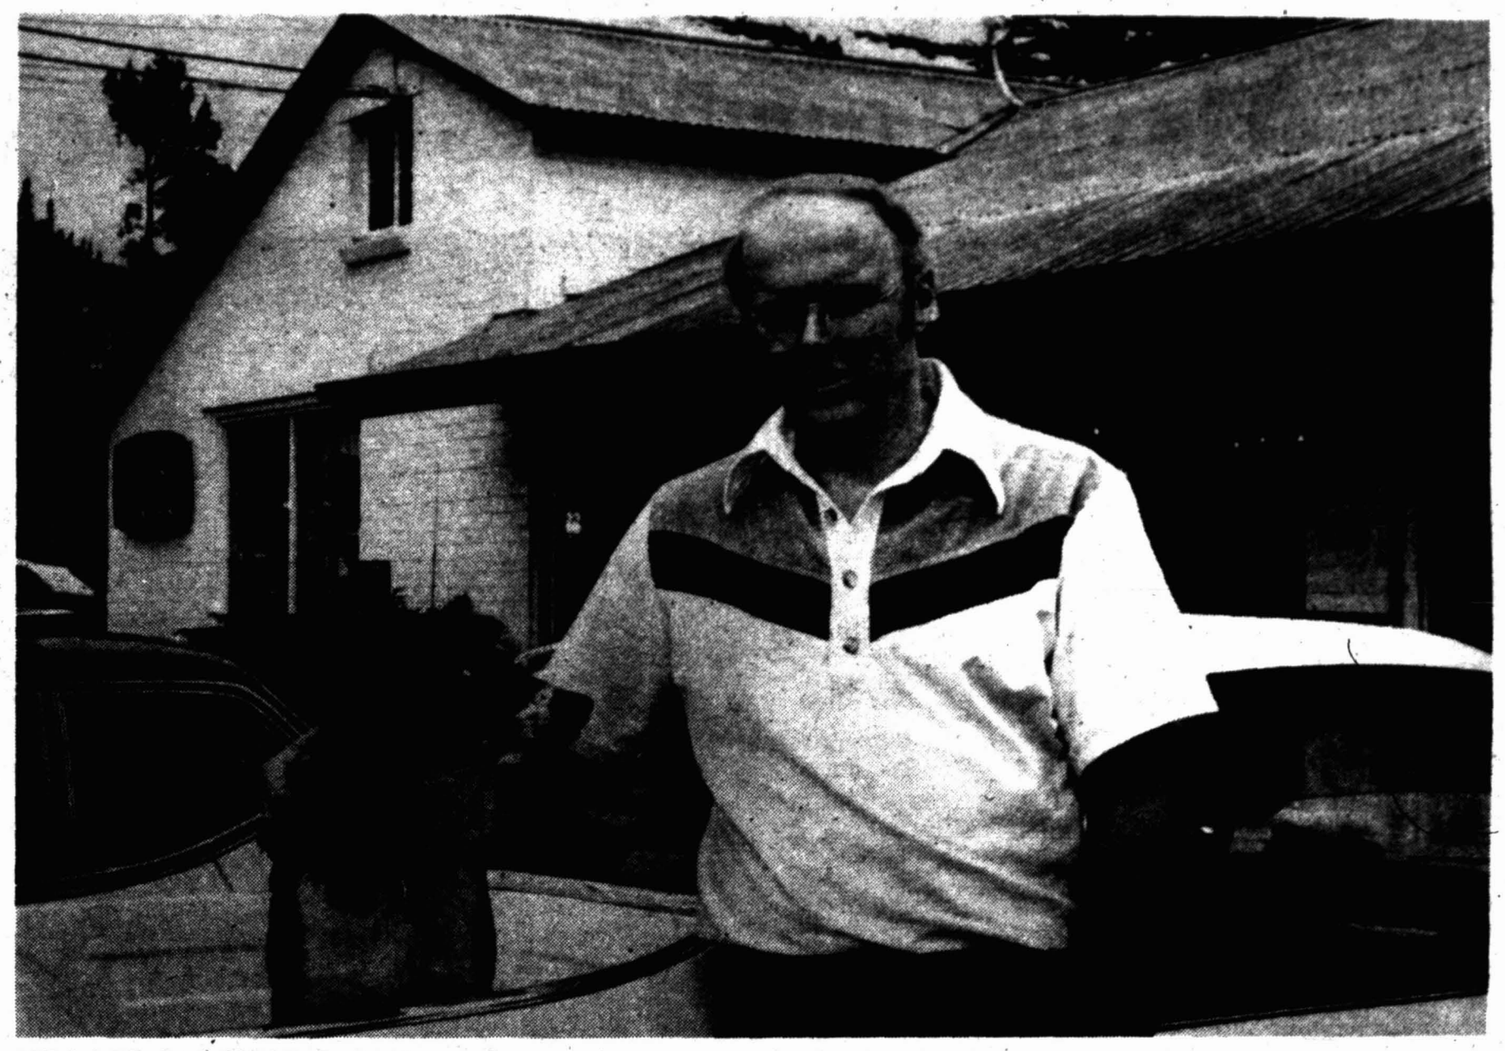
The commissioners requested more information and gave the applicants 120 days to re-submit plans.

The Canton Restaurant, the only Chinese restaurant in Carmel, was faced with closing when Dick Bruhn, who leases restaurateur Dock Lor his Ocean Avenue space, informed the restaurant of his intention not to renew its lease.

Residents and the Carmel City Council acted to persuade Bruhn not to evict Dock, whose lease expired in November 1979, until the restaurant could be relocated or a settlement with Bruhn reached.

Dock Lor and Bruhn are now working on a plan that would allow the Canton to stay in its current location by yielding some basement storage space and an area at the entrance of the restaurant to Bruhn's Back Pocket. The clothing store would then expand from its current location through the basement and to Ocean Avenue by way of a stairwell at the entrance to the Canton.

Architect George Brooke-Kothlow is in charge of the project, first proposed in January by Ed Hicks.



VILLAGE ELECTRIC OWNER Peter Tracey ponders his company's move from its Mission and Fourth location to Carmel Rancho Shopping Center. Tracey said he "couldn't work a deal" with his landlord. The land is held by the Anita Doud Trust and is administered by Monterey accountant George Brucato and Crocker Bank. (Alan McEwen photo)

'Wright's right man'

Dear Editor:

I am going to cast my vote on April 8 for my friend and fellow planning commissioner Jim Wright.

As a matter of fact, he is the only one among the five who are running, after whose name I shall put an X.

Jim is his own man. When a problem is addressed, he will spend the time to study first, do whatever research is necessary to give him additional information concerning the problem, weigh the possible solutions and then make a decision.

There is no shooting from the hip or off the top of the head solutions from this man.

He is dedicated to preserving the Carmel we all love and is influenced by traditions, not trends.

Jim Wright is indeed the right man for the Carmel City Council. Vote the Wright way.

Cheers police action

Dear Editor:

I was amazed to read the letter from Mr. Spencer Gilman in your Feb. 28th Pine Cone expressing his outrage at the police protection of "impounding" his car keys left in his car which was parked for "only 20 minutes."

It takes only a few seconds for a car thief to step into a car and drive off.

Then the police have to search far and wide to recover said car — all because a careless citizen was too negligent to prevent the theft!

In these times of prevalent crime, even citizens of Carmel are likely to be victimized and it is difficult to believe we still have among us those who refuse to observe precautions.

I feel that most people in Carmel appreciate this police service, rather than whimsically becoming annoyed at the "inconvenience."

Mr. Gilman is fortunate to find his car still there — keys not withstanding!

Let's hope this needed service by Carmel's "caring" Police Department continues.

Likes Brunn's wishes

Dear Editor:

The wisdom and compassion of one candidate for mayor of Carmel-by-the-Sea are apparent when you review his "Wish List" for our community.

Howard Brunn, combining the sensitivity of a longtime resident (more than half a century) with the practical thinking of a successful local businessman, has put together a list of "wishes" which succinctly mirror the hopes and dreams of Carmel residents.

A local mini-bus system . . . improved communication within the city family and with a variety of significant local groups . . . returning the City Council to its proper role as a policy-making body . . . these are just a few of the important community issues appearing on Howard Brunn's "Wish List." If Howard is elected mayor, we believe most can become realities.

It is essential, we believe, for our first elected mayor to be closely attuned to the day-to-day happenings of our city government, so that he may assume chairmanship of the council with a minimum of delay and disruption, providing prompt, rational guidance based upon his own personal knowledge of and participation in matters which have been under consideration during recent months.

A major change during the past year has been the strengthening of the city administrator position, as demanded by the citizens of Carmel. Howard Brunn is the only mayoral candidate who we can be certain will continue to support the concept of a strong city administrator.

We believe it would be a tragedy for our village if, through splitting the vote, our mayor for the next two years should be elected by a minority of the voters. The only way to be sure of avoiding this very real possibility is for every registered voter to cast a ballot, and for a majority of those ballots to be cast for Howard Brunn.

We seriously urge you to join us in voting for Howard. It's the only way to be sure!

Pulling for Brunn

Dear Editor:

Your vote for Howard Brunn for mayor of Carmel will ensure our concern for keeping Carmel in good hands.

We are sending our absentee ballots up from Maui and hope Howard is elected by the biggest majority ever recorded in the history of Carmel elections.

Having had the distinct privilege of being reared in Carmel and knowing Howard for fifty-plus years, we are sure he is the man for the position. He shares our love for Carmel as we all knew it. His desire to preserve its beauty and charm plus his leadership qualities and most successful business acumen will ensure the perfect balance we need in our new mayor.

Howard has shown a steady hand at the helm in our recent troubled times, he has helped to keep our city government on the tracks and he has done his homework well.

We feel he will be accessible to all Carmel residents and listen, evaluate and act.

Parking plan rapped

Dear Editor:

Last evening a little before five, I met up with the new parking signs for the first time.

I don't know what Carmel had in mind when they decreased the parking limits, but it seems to me the results will be to drive more people to the nearby shopping centers where parking is easy.

I needed a two-hour parking space as I was afraid of receiving a ticket before six. I was headed for an early dinner with a friend, and had to drive around (using my gas) a couple of blocks before I found a space on Sixth and Junipero.

While I walked to meet my friend my thoughts were that one can't eat a pleasant, leisurely lunch or dinner, have one's hair done, or do any kind of shopping that requires trying on clothes in as short a time as one hour. As far as I'm concerned, paying parking fines is a complete waste of money.

These new regulations will also throw more cars into the residential areas.

I am accustomed to parking on San Carlos near Tenth and I am downtown every day, so it won't bother me too much. But there are many people who can't or won't walk so far and if they drive they are the ones who will be driven somewhere else to spend their money.

Perhaps this is what the council is trying to achieve?

The Village:

Mayoral candidates meet the businessmen

THE MAYORAL CANDIDATES wore their best suits and voiced their most earnest promises at the public forum sponsored March 6 by the Carmel Business Association at La Playa Hotel.

Barney Laiolo, Howard Brunn, Mike Brown and Valerio Biondo each spoke for 10 minutes and then fielded questions from CBA President Tom Brown and an audience of 70.

Laiolo, who was mayor of Carmel from 1968-72, said that "not many problems have been solved" in the eight years since his tenure. He said that he is a "doer — not a talker," and offered his previous record as mayor as evidence.

"We accomplished quite a bit (in 1968-72)," he said.

Responding to a question from CBA President Brown, Laiolo said that possibly a "joint venture" between commercial landlords and the city could stop the exodus of residentially oriented businesses.

•

IN RECENT WEEKS the Canton Restaurant, the Carmel Village Theater, the Carmel Drive-In Market, and Village Electric have all been rocked by proposed rent hikes that could make it impossible for them to continue business in the city.

Laiolo told the businessmen that "there is nothing wrong with tourism as long as it doesn't get out of hand." He added that the "business community provides most of the revenue" to the city.

He said he disapproves of the "self-perpetuation" on the council this year. Brunn and Brown will be able to return to the council if not elected mayor.

Both Brunn and Brown have two years remaining on their council terms.

Laiolo also decried the composition of the various city commissions and boards as "not representing the true emphasis" and intent of their existence.

He did not elaborate.

•

BRUNN BEGAN HIS speech by asking his supporters in the audience of 70 to rise. "Boy, that's quite a showing. Wow," he said.

Brunn added that he has other supporters who could not be on hand for the forum.

He said that he has the support of many members of the city commissions and boards, including Steve Crouch, Robert Stephenson, R. Wright Campbell and Matt Smith, chairmen of the library board, Planning Commission, Cultural Commission and Forestry Commission, respectively.

Brunn said that Carmel should "reach its natural boundaries" by annexing Hatton Fields, Carmel Woods and Carmel Point. "There's a lot of good energy there," he said.

•

BRUNN THEN TURNED to business. "Over half the budget of the city of Carmel comes out of the business district," Brunn noted, "but we (businessmen) don't have a lot of say in what happens in the city government.

"It's residentially controlled and residentially oriented and we have to be — if we're going to be on the City Council — residentially oriented candidates.

"It makes a good balance and I like it," he said.

He commented that it is difficult for young people to buy property in Carmel.

Brunn concluded his speech by stating that the city policymakers "should keep a sense of humor" about their actions.

•

BRUNN THEN RESPONDED to Tom Brown's question on business community-residential community relations by saying that the problem has been "the attitude of the majority of the council members."

He said that he can "bring together the residential and business communities better than any other candidate.

"The people who can solve problems in the business district are the landlords," Brunn said. "We must get them together and talk."

He added that he has "a plan to return residentially-oriented businesses to the business district."

He did not elaborate.

•

BROWN EMPHASIZED HIS six-year tenure on the Carmel City Council and his activities with the Association of Monterey Bay Area Governments (AMBAG), the Monterey Peninsula Garbage and Refuse District Board and the Monterey Peninsula Transportation Commission.

Brown said that he is "not a gifted composer or writer" and has "no talents to offer the city...except for energy."

He said that he is a "doer" and stated that he "introduced 52 pieces of legislation in the council during his six years in office. He added that 48 of the 52 were suggested to him by Carmel residents.

•

AMONG HIS accomplishments, Brown mentioned the passage of the tour bus ordinance and recycling program,

Minibus proposal becomes a political football

By KEITH YATES

IT STARTED AS A SIMPLE question and developed into almost an hour of election season debate.

Councilman Howard Brunn wondered aloud at the council meeting last Monday night whether the city could use the $173,000 in uncommitted city transportation funds for a minibus system.

Councilman Mike Brown said that the City Council "looked at a minibus system three years ago and found it to be a grave mistake."

Brunn and Brown are both candidates for mayor in the April 8 municipal elections.

Brunn has included a minibus system in his campaign "wish list" for Carmel. Brown has been a frequent critic of any minibus proposal.

•

BROWN SAID THAT IT would be more "rational and feasible" for the city to subsidize resident users of the existing taxi service. "A taxi provides more personal and convenient service," Brown said.

He added that the city should not pursue "half-cocked" ideas about a minibus system, and drew attention to Brunn's not being on the council when minibuses were previously discussed.

•

BRUNN RETORTED THAT Brown didn't "quite know what (he was) doing."

He said that he and former City Administrator Jack Collins had once visited a successful dial-a-ride minibus system in San Luis Obispo and Morro Bay. "The system works beautifully there — it would be feasible and viable here, too," Brunn said.

He added that he didn't like Brown's use of the term "half-cocked."

"This is a residentially oriented thing," Brunn said. "We'd have it working here today if it hadn't been for the divisiveness on the council in the last year."

•

COUNCILMAN LES GROSS feared that "the residential area could become a vast parking lot" under a minibus system because it would allow non-resident employees to park their cars in the residential neighborhoods and call up the minibus for a ride to the business district.

Brunn said, "Sure, I suppose these people are going to park in front of a house and then go up to the door saying: 'Pardon me ma'am, I'd like to use your phone to call the minibus.'"

Gross said that the residential districts in San Francisco "are suffering intolerable pain" because of parking problems caused by the bus system. He added that he would vote against any minibus proposal.

Brunn retorted: "You won't be here to vote on it!"

Gross' term on the council expires next month. He is not seeking re-election.

•

BROWN ADDED THAT Pacific Grove had a minibus system and then dropped it.

He said that the Carmel City Council dropped consideration of a similar system three years ago because Monterey Peninsula Transit, which was to operate the system, recommended against it.

Brunn made a final pitch for the system by stating that three to five companies could be involved in the operation of the system.

"I'm looking at serving the residents (of Carmel) first. They are primarily older people and cannot afford to drive their own cars anymore," Brunn said.

"Well, I think we've got about as much mileage out of this as we can tonight," Brunn sighed.

•

THE UNCOMMITTED $173,000 that sparked the exchange is held by Monterey County for the city under the Transportation Development Act (TDA). The TDA funds are derived from sales taxes and are allocated on the basis of population, according to City Administrator Doug Peterson.

The TDA legislation places priority on the development of mass transit in the use of the funds.

At the Monday night meeting, the council budgeted $3,461 in 1980-81 for a subsidized taxi program for the handicapped, and $543 for transportation planning. Under a joint powers agreement, the city will contribute $22,809 to Monterey Peninsula Transit for bus service.

Peterson said that the three commitments, totaling $26,813, are to be deducted from a TDA fund total of $200,000, leaving about $173,000 in uncommitted transportation funds.

He said that the $200,000 comes from an unused balance from previous years of $128,261 plus a 1980-81 estimated revenue of $73,100.

•

PETERSON OBSERVED THAT 48 Carmel residents participate in the "specialized transit" program for the handicapped. He said that the program pays up to 90 percent of the cost of $30 Taxi Scrips.

Under the program guidelines, a handicapped person with income of less than $400 per month pays 10 percent ($3) of the $30 scrip, monthly income of up to $678, 30 percent ($9) for the scrip, and income up to $825 per month, 50 percent ($15) for the $30 scrip.

Peterson said that TDA funds and matching funds from the federal Urban Mass Transit Administration pay the remaining balance of the scrips.

Aspirants have mixed reactions to first forum

FORMER MAYOR BARNEY Laiolo said it "didn't prove an awful lot." Howard Brunn said "it went just fine." Mike Brown said the others "camouflaged" the issues. Valerio Biondo said he enjoyed himself.

All four — candidates for mayor in the April 8 elections — were reflecting on the first candidates' forum in the campaign.

The March 6 forum at the La Playa Hotel was sponsored by the Carmel Business Association and was attended by about 70 businessmen and members of the public.

Laiolo, who was mayor from 1968-72, told the Pine Cone that he "didn't like the grandstanding" of Brunn at the forum.

Brunn had begun his speech by asking his supporters in the audience to rise. "Boy, that's quite a showing. Wow," he had remarked.

•

LAIOLO SAID THAT "they do that in big cities where they pay people to go in and make a lot of racket. We're not a grandstanding town here in Carmel."

The former mayor said that the surprise of the meeting was write-in candidate Biondo.

"I thought he might be a weirdo," Laiolo said. "But that boy is no weirdo. He has more on the ball than he's given credit for. His presentation was well-planned. I was impressed."

•

BIONDO TOLD THE Pine Cone that he "thoroughly enjoyed" the forum. "The politician will behave as a politician. The buffoon will behave as a buffoon," he said. "Let's give them credit for what they are."

Biondo did not say which candidate was the "politician" and which the "buffoon."

"People can feel you out," he said. "I said what I wanted to say. I'm not interested in political manipulation. There was a lot of bombast and rhetoric at the meeting, but no 'What would you like to see happen in Carmel?' from the candidates. There were plenty of fancy phrases and fancy footwork. They're trying to please everybody."

•

MIKE BROWN SAID that the other candidates "camouflaged the issues."

"I got up there and told the people what I'd done in the last six years. I told them they can come to me with their problems and concerns. The others just politicked."

In a subsequent telephone interview with the Pine Cone, Brown said that Laiolo and Biondo had "responded in some way to the intent of the (CBA sponsored) meeting." He added that Brunn "was not responsive" to the intent of the forum.

Brown objected to Brunn's statement that he (Brunn) had the support of the majority of members of the city's commissions and boards.

"I was approached by several commissioners shortly after the meeting who indicated that they resented the implication that they support Brunn. His remarks were careless," Brown said.

•

BRUNN SAID THE forum "went about as well as could be expected."

"You can't really get into issues in the 10 minutes you have to speak," he said. "I just wanted to let the audience know what kind of support I have. I don't believe in coming on real strong on issues at a meeting like that."

Brunn said that he "felt good vibrations from the group for (his) candidacy."

He added that he had "lots of other thoughts (about the forum) but no comments."

VALERIO BIONDO (at the podium), an official write-in candidate, led off the forum for mayoral contenders. Biondo, a carpenter, wants to restore "graciousness and nobility" to that office. Seated at the speakers' table are (from left) candidates Barney Laiolo and Mike Brown, CBA President Tom Brown, CBA Program Director Paul Allen and candidate Howard Brunn. (Alan McEwen photo)

retention of the Post Office at its present site, the restriction of recreational vehicles from Scenic Road, and the lowering of the tax rate from $1.10 to $.50 per $100 assessed valuation.

"In essence," he said, "I believe that while I've been on the council what I've worked for is to try to keep Carmel the area we enjoy."

Brown suggested that a commission or board be established "to share and communicate what's happening in the business district and City Hall." He said that the group might include five businessmen and five residents.

•

BIONDO, A WRITE-IN candidate for mayor, was included in the forum. Biondo's last-minute application for the race was disqualified by the county Election Department because his nomination petition fell two signatures short of the required 20.

He has since become an official write-in candidate by submitting 20 valid signatures on a write-in petition.

Biondo said the best person for the mayoral position would be a "gracious candidate with some nobility."

He declared that the mayor should have "an open heart and an open mind" and "allow people to listen to each other."

Biondo said that "no platforms are needed. There's enough intelligence and experience in this town to send anything that's cockamamey down the tube."

He stated the city needs "some understanding with the tourists who leave their money here."

•

ASKED BY AN AUDIENCE member how he looks upon the annexation to Carmel of adjacent areas, Biondo replied "those people have their hearts and minds in Carmel — let them be a part of it if they choose."

Biondo said that "backward thinking" is responsible for the split between the businesses and the residents.

"If there's a cabinet shop on Ocean Avenue, tourists will approve and say 'How quaint'," he said. "Let's stop bitching about where the money is coming from."

•

FORMER MAYOR BERNARD Anderson asked the candidates if they would promise to adjourn council meetings "by 2 a.m."

Biondo said that a band or aria singer at intermission would keep things moving.

Laiolo said he might support the idea. "I'll play my gutbucket," he said.

Developers decline to join battle

County faces lonely fight against Carmel lawsuit

By STEVE HELLMAN

MONTEREY COUNTY MAY stand alone in its defense against the lawsuit by the city of Carmel challenging its adoption of the new Carmel Valley Master Plan.

The suit, filed March 5 on behalf of Carmel and Virginia Merz of Carmel Valley in Monterey County Superior Court, asks the county to set aside its adoption of the Master Plan until it prepares and considers an Environmental Impact Report (EIR) for the 20-year plan.

Although an EIR for the Master Plan could affect the future of the proposed Rancho Canada Lodge and the Carmel Valley Ranch development, the developers have not yet joined the county in its defense against the lawsuit.

Deputy County Counsel Jose Ramos said last week that attorneys representing the developers declined to join the case during an informal meeting in the chambers of Superior Court Judge Richard Silver.

•

WHEN CONTACTED BY this newspaper, attorney Jerry Dalton, representing developer Nick Lombardo, and Michael Kling, representing the Carmel Valley Ranch, confirmed that their clients decided not to join the case.

'If the lawsuit affects any of our clients, we may be hired to help the defense.' — Michael Kling, attorney for Carmel Valley Ranch.

The attorneys said, however, that a decision would depend on the contents of the lawsuit, which they had not seen.

Kling said, "We're (Carmel Valley Ranch) not named in the lawsuit. I haven't seen the pleadings, so our decision will depend on what's in there.

"If the lawsuit affects any of our clients, we may be hired to help the defense," said Kling, who works for the Salinas firm of Noland, Hamerly, Etienne and Hoss, representatives of Carmel Valley Ranch and other developments.

•

DALTON SAID THAT he "just happened to be there (in Judge Silver's office). We really haven't considered joining the county. We're not named (in the lawsuit)."

Lombardo's planned Rancho Canada Lodge is named in a separate lawsuit filed in February, attacking the county's approval of the use permit for the 175-room lodge in Carmel Valley. The first hearing on that suit is scheduled for Friday, March 21, in Monterey County Superior Court.

The city intends, however, that the lawsuit against the Master Plan will force an EIR, which in turn will find Lombardo's proposed lodge inconsistent and improper for its location. This would make it unnecessary for the city to pursue the individual lawsuit against the lodge.

•

RAMOS SAID THAT the county's defense of the Master Plan will be to maintain that it is the result of an enormous and lengthy planning effort, and that it is so thorough as to preclude the need for an EIR.

The Master Plan, with its constraints on development, its annual quota of 125 new units, its allocation system for all subdivisions and its other provisions, acts as an EIR, he said.

To require an EIR, Ramos said, it has to be shown that the Master Plan has significant adverse environmental impacts. He noted that the supervisors determined that the new Master Plan will have less impact on the environment than the plan it replaces.

He also said that "an EIR is not necessary for the Master Plan when there are EIRs for the individual projects in the Valley."

Preparing an EIR would mean about a six-month delay in implementation of the Master Plan, he said.

The county Planning Commission is currently considering the six ordinances to implement the Master Plan.

•

CARMEL HAS INDICATED that it might seek a court injunction to temporarily halt the approval of the six ordinances until the lawsuit is resolved.

Its lawsuit was prepared by City Attorney George Brehmer, attorney Alexander Henson, acting as special counsel to the city, and attorney Richard Rosenthal, representing Merz.

Rosenthal, a resident of Carmel Valley, is also representing Harry Holt of Carmel in his lawsuit against the county General Plan and the Carmel Valley Ranch Specific Plan. Henson, also a resident of Carmel Valley, is a former member of the state Attorney General's office.

•

THE ATTORNEYS CHARGE in a 16-page brief that the county Board of Supervisors ignored the requirements of the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) by not ordering an EIR for the Master Plan. The lawsuit also charges that the supervisors circumvented the established planning process by not requiring the county Planning Commission to review major changes in the Master Plan.

The Master Plan was approved by the supervisors Jan. 15, after nearly three years of work by a 13-member citizens committee.

The supervisors decided last July to approve a negative declaration for the Master Plan, which precluded the preparation of a time-consuming EIR.

The supervisors declared that no significant adverse environmental impacts would result from the Master Plan, despite the 2,500 new homes that it will allow in the Valley for the next 20 years.

The negative declaration was approved over the objections of the Carmel City Council and numerous organizations and residents, who insisted that the plan would permit development that would have a noticeable adverse impact on air quality, traffic and water supply.

•

THE LAWSUIT SPECIFICALLY attacks the supervisors' decision to allow for Lombardo's proposed 175-room Rancho Canada Lodge and development of the Odello family land at the Valley's mouth—a decision that was made by the supervisors after they had approved the negative declaration.

Noting that the supervisors' changes were "simply written into the text of the plan" and not made as formal amendments, the lawsuit charges that "this informal process totally overlooked that (the) changes provided for more intensive land uses in Carmel Valley."

'The precise issue at hand is the supervisors' official findings that suggest that since the new Master Plan provides for less development than the plan it replaces, the new plan will decrease adverse environmental impacts. These findings are ludicrous.' — City of Carmel lawsuit.

The changes not only should have been reviewed by the Planning Commission, the lawsuit contends, but also required that the supervisors either reconsider the negative declaration or order an EIR.

•

"THE PRECISE ISSUE at hand," the lawsuit states, is the supervisors' official findings that suggest that since the new Master Plan provides for less development than the plan it replaces, the new plan will decrease adverse environmental impacts.

"These findings are ludicrous," the lawsuit declares. "Just because the new plan will allegedly decrease environmental impacts in comparison to the old plan does not mean that it does not authorize projects which will have a significant environmental effect.

"The use of such straw men is not permitted under CEQA," the lawsuit states.

The lawsuit continues: "Development pressure is threatening some of the fundamental elements that define the character of the Valley . . . the plan itself acknowledges the adverse environmental effects . . . from increased water consumption, increased sewage, increased traffic and air pollution and decreased open space and wildlife habitat."

•

THE QUOTA SYSTEM IN the new Master Plan permits 125 units to be constructed annually for the next 20 years.

The lawsuit cites the case of Bozung vs. Local Agency Formation Commission of Ventura County, in which the "Supreme Court footnoted that 144 additional dwelling units would generate an estimated half-ton of vehicle emissions per day."

The case of City of Carmel vs. Monterey County is cited, which involved the proposed Rio Road Motel. The 1977 lawsuit, won by the city, forced the county to consider the adverse environmental impacts that were cited in the EIR for the proposed motel.

"It is nonsensical to suggest that a document authorizing dozens of such projects (like the proposed motel), albeit with mitigations, would have no substantial adverse environmental impacts (on the Valley)," the lawsuit contends.

It states, "In light of the size and nature of the development permitted in the Carmel Valley Master Plan, it is incredible that a negative declaration was adopted."

The lawsuit also cites other cases in which amendments to a General Plan like this Master Plan were deemed "projects" and required an EIR. It requests that the Planning Commission review the changes in the Master Plan, and that the supervisors comply with CEQA and the State Planning and Zoning Act by preparing an EIR.

'We just sat there quiet and scared'

Lightning strikes tree, jars River School

A BOLT OF LIGHTNING struck a large cypress tree on 16th Avenue in Carmel on Wednesday, March 5, sending an explosive concussion through classrooms at Carmel River School.

Windows in the elementary school were cracked and the lights blinked.

School was in session when the lightning hit at about 1:30 p.m. No one was injured.

The school is located on Monte Verde Street and 15th Avenue, around the corner from the tree that was ripped into large chunks and shards of wood by the lightning. There was no fire.

•

WILMA BLACKMAN, WHO lives near the tree, said she was at home when she heard "a terrible explosion."

"I thought it was an earthquake," Blackman said, standing on her lawn 25 feet from the ruined tree. Workmen were preparing to cut down the remaining 15 feet of tree trunk.

•

JILL ANN ARNOLD, 8, said her third grade class was listening to a talk on soccer by a Carmel High School student.

"It shook the whole classroom for at least one minute," she said. "The lights went out, then blinked back on."

Did the students duck under their tables?

"We just sat there quiet and scared," she said, adding that "wood chips were flying through the air. We looked and saw that the window was cracked."

Jill said she had never seen anything like it. Her class, taught by Jean Rudolf, went outside to look at the tree. "It was split right in half," said an incredulous Arnold.

•

"IT JARRED THE WHOLE school," said Jean Taylor, River School secretary.

"It was hefty...sounded like a huge plane hitting the building," Taylor said.

Three windows were cracked in Rudolf's classroom, Taylor said, and "one little girl fell off her chair."

"There were torrents of rain, and then a white flash of lightning," Taylor said. "The whole mall turned white."

•

JOHN WILLIAMS, a resident of Carmel Highlands, reported that at about 1:30 p.m. a "savage crack of lightning" was followed by a loud rumble of thunder.

Williams said that he witnessed several flashes of lightning during the brief storm.

"That one bolt of lightning was definitely the brightest and closest," he said.

Trustees approve six-period day for Carmel High, Middle School

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION of the Carmel Unified School District has decided to schedule a full six-period day at Carmel High School and Middle School despite a bleak financial outlook.

The trustees also voted at their March 11 meeting not to send layoff notices to teachers due to declining enrollment or in anticipation of the Jarvis II tax-cutting measure (Proposition 9) on the June 3 ballot.

Action was also taken at the meeting to ratify contracts for the 1979-80 fiscal year for classified employees and administrators.

Classified employees, which include bus drivers, secretaries, bookkeepers, custodians, library clerks and teachers' aides, will receive a 5.4 percent across-the-board increase in salaries and benefits. The raise is retroactive to July 1, 1979. Classified employees in 17 positions will also receive equity adjustments in their pay to provide parity with other Monterey Peninsula school districts.

•

THE CENTRAL OFFICE administrators, principals and other administrators were granted a 4.4 percent increase for salaries and benefits, retroactive to July 1, 1979.

Additional 2 percent salary increases will be given to administrators and classified employees if the ending balance for the 1979-80 district budget is $200,000 or more. The conditional 2 percent increase would also be provided to the certificated (teaching) staff and classified management staff.

Management and teachers reached agreements on their contracts with the district last fall, both groups receiving 5 percent increases in salary and benefits.

•

THE TRUSTEES DIRECTED William Rand, assistant superintendent in charge of curriculum, to register students for a mandatory full six-period day, and prepare a master schedule based on it.

While acknowledging that the scheduling might have to be cut back to an optional six periods or five periods, the trustees nevertheless decided it would be better to plan for the maximum schedule for next year and wait to see the impact of Prop. 9 or if enrollment suffers a heavy decline.

Prop. 9 could eliminate as much as 30 percent of the district's state income, Superintendent Dr. Carl Wilsey noted. He added, however, that the state's Department of Education has advised school districts not to layoff teachers or plan for huge cuts in anticipation of Prop. 9, which would cut state income taxes in half.

In other action:

- The trustees were presented with the preliminary budget for 1980-81. The projected budget of $6.35 million, an increase of 6 percent over this year's $5.99 million budget, would include the mandatory six-period day and present level of staffing for teachers.

The preliminary $6.35 million budget, however, would result in a $48,000 deficit and no ending reserves.

- Students who have not provided documents or proof that they have been immunized against diphtheria, pertussis, tetanus, polio and measles, or waivers from their parents, will be excluded from school beginning April 7. For one week, students will be able to receive free booster shots and immunizations at special clinics in order to return to school. The immunizations are required by federal law, except for parents who sign a waiver declaring opposition on religious grounds.

Crucial ruling by state expected soon

Will sanitary district drop reclamation project?

By STEVE HELLMAN

THE CARMEL SANITARY District — buffeted by delays, financing problems and concerted opposition in its own backyard — may be on the verge of re-evaluating its proposed $13.7 million wastewater reclamation project.

State funding for the embattled project was suspended in January by the state Division of Water Quality.

Division Chief Ray Walsh has deferred $137,000 in grant monies for the design phase until a crucial ruling is made by the State Water Resources Control Board.

•

THE SANITARY DISTRICT submitted a formal request last November to the state water board to modify the state designation of Carmel Bay as an Area of Special Biological Significance (ASBS). The sanitary district wants to increase its discharge into the bay since it cannot pump its excess effluent to a regional treatment plant. The ASBS designation requires that the sanitary district halt its summer discharge into the bay by 1983.

To comply with the ASBS designation, the sanitary district proposes to dispose of its treated wastewater on golf courses in the Del Monte Forest and Carmel Valley, and only discharge effluent into the bay during the winter months.

For reasons that sanitary district and state officials cannot explain, the state water board has delayed a decision on the alteration of the ASBS. The board is scheduled to discuss the sanitary district request at a March 25 workshop in Sacramento, but a decision on the proposal isn't expected until the April board meeting.

•

MEANWHILE, THE PEBBLE BEACH Sanitary District has petitioned the state water board to completely remove the ASBS designation from Carmel Bay.

In a letter dated Feb. 4, the Pebble Beach Sanitary District board of directors called the ASBS a "borderline case." The directors charged that there is no evidence of damage to marine life in the bay from effluent and that the reclamation project goes "vastly beyond the financial requirements envisioned at the time of the original (ASBS) designation."

The Pebble Beach Sanitary District pumps its sewage to the Carmel Sanitary District treatment plant, and pays for one-third of the plant operation and maintenance.

The Pebble Beach directors, however, decided last October to withhold their $37,543 share of the reclamation project. They reaffirmed their opposition to the costs at the Feb. 21 meeting of the Carmel Sanitary District board.

"We have withdrawn from the project," declared Richard Lord, an outspoken member of the Pebble Beach board.

"We were not asked to begin with if we supported reclamation, and we have not been shown that it will benefit us," Lord said.

He indicated that the Pebble Beach Sanitary District might be willing to help finance an extension of the outfall line beyond the ASBS boundary, an alternative to the reclamation project.

•

LAST YEAR THE CARMEL Sanitary District board threatened to file a lawsuit against Pebble Beach. The directors maintained that their contract binds the two districts to participate in the reclamation project.

Donald Freeman, attorney for the Carmel Sanitary District, stated at the Feb. 21 meeting that the two boards should negotiate to avoid litigation.

Freeman noted that the Pebble Beach board's October resolution stated that the design phase of the reclamation project was not included in the original contract.

'Reclamation makes sense, but it's too expensive. There are other ways of getting around the ASBS than the reclamation project.' — Kenneth Jones, executive officer for the state Regional Water Quality Control Board.

"It is the opinion of our staff, however, that Pebble Beach is bound by the contract to pay for Step I (planning) and Step II (design)," Freeman said.

•

MICHAEL ZAMBORY, GENERAL manager of the Carmel Sanitary District, announced at the Feb. 21 meeting that the state had advised the sanitary district not to proceed with design until the state water board acted on the request for increased winter discharge into the bay. He confirmed that the state Division of Water Quality "in a surprising turn of events" had suspended its funding for Step II.

"It appears," Zambory said, "that the state water board may hold a hearing on the ASBS. If public opinion appears to be overwhelming in favor of dissolving the ASBS designation, due in part to the high costs (of reclamation), it is conceivable that the ASBS designation could be dropped."

In that case, Zambory said the reclamation project would be unneccessary. He added, however, that Step II (the design phase of the project) includes important physical improvements to the sanitary district's treatment plant.

He advised the board that it should adopt a "wait and see" attitude until the state water board acts on its request for additional discharge.

•

DIRECTOR JIM PRUITT, a longtime opponent of the project, said that the state cutback in funds and the opposition from the Pebble Beach Sanitary District pointed in one direction:

"It leaves reclaimed wastewater out of the picture," he declared.

The directors decided, however, to postpone action until they receive the state water board ruling.

•

ZAMBORY CONCEDED AFTER the meeting that the recent "turn of events" could cause a turnabout in the sanitary district's support for the ASBS and reclamation.

If the state water board denies the request for additional discharge into the bay, Zambory said the only alternative is for the sanitary district to extend the outfall line beyond the ASBS boundary.

The cost to the sanitary district taxpayers would be about the same in either event, he said. Reclamation would cost $13.7 million; extension of the outfall line carries a $14 million price tag.

Federal and state monies would finance 87½ percent of the reclamation project, which includes the improvements to the treatment plant, Zambory said. Local taxpayers would have to pay more than $2 million. Annual operating costs would be $930,000, according to the 1979 report on the project, which concludes that reclamation is the most cost-effective of six alternatives.

•

ZAMBORY SAID THAT a May 1979 study by Kennedy Engineers shows that the outfall lines can be extended beyond the ASBS boundary through a number of routes, and that the least expensive would cost more than $14 million. This alternative, Zambory said, would extend the outfall line a mile and half into the ocean, or 1,000 feet beyond the ASBS boundary. The outfall presently reaches 600 feet into the bay.

Construction of a new outfall line would be eligible for state and federal grants, he said, but it would not save water like reclamation.

Zambory recalled that the State Water Resources Control Board suggested reclamation in 1975. "We've been following the state's mandate ever since, trying to develop reclamation and preserve the ASBS," he said.

One state official disagrees with Zambory. Kenneth Jones, executive officer for the state Regional Water Quality Control Board, said last week that reclamation "makes sense, but it's too expensive."

Jones insisted that "there are other ways of getting around the ASBS than the reclamation project." He said that extending the outfall line beyond the ASBS could cost only $5 million.

•

IF THE ASBS IS DISSOLVED by the state water board after it receives a mandate from residents through public hearings to eliminate the designation, "then we wouldn't have to do anything," Zambory noted. "It would be status quo; we could dump all we wanted into the bay."

Zambory said last week that he had written a letter to Carla Bard, president of the State Water Resources Control Board, urging swift action on the sanitary district's request for increased discharge into the bay.

'It appears that the state water board may hold a hearing on the ASBS. If public opinion appears to be overwhelming in favor of dissolving the ASBS designation, due in part to the high costs (of reclamation), it is conceivable that the ASBS designation could be dropped.' — Michael Zambory, general manager of the Carmel Sanitary District.

"Why should the state board wait nearly four months to respond to our request? I don't know," he said.

He noted that Bard and two new members have been appointed to the board, and that the petition from Pebble

EXTENDING THE OUTFALL line from the sewage treatment plant is one alternative available to the Carmel Sanitary District in its effort to halt discharge into Carmel Bay. The outfall line (Alternative 211) would have to be extended beyond the boundary of the Area of Special Biological Significance in the bay. Cost of the longer outfall line, however, is more than the sanitary district's proposed $13.7 million wastewater reclamation project. The sanitary district is reconsidering the alternatives in light of problems with the reclamation project.

State may lift restriction

'ASBS designation never intended for Carmel Bay'

IS CARMEL BAY'S designation as an Area of Special Biological Significance (ASBS) a vital environmental protection measure or a political tool?

The State Water Resources Control Board assigned the ASBS to Carmel Bay in 1975, adding it to a list of some 30 similar designations along the coast.

The state action followed a formal request from the Carmel Sanitary District.

A majority of residents supported the ASBS as an environmental measure at a public hearing conducted by the state.

The State Water Resources Control Board ordered the Carmel Sanitary District to halt its effluent discharge into the bay as soon as an alternative was developed. In a separate resolution, the state board suggested that the sanitary district pursue wastewater reclamation.

•

THE SANITARY DISTRICT board responded in 1976 with two self-imposed moratoriums: One halted all new sewer connections; the other banned annexations to the district.

Despite an outcry from developers, the board proceeded with its plan to maintain the ASBS, which required a limitation on additional sewage and a search for a new disposal method.

The so-called Early Start Reclamation Project was approved by the sanitary district board in late 1978. It called for a $13.7 million plan to dispose of treated wastewater on golf courses during the summer months, and pipe the winter effluent to a regional treatment plant on the Monterey Bay.

Although it was the most cost-effective of 48 alternatives, the reclamation project has been repeatedly stalled, raising questions about its purpose, its cost, and also questions about the need for the ASBS. (See other story.)

•

ACCORDING TO KENNETH Jones, executive officer for the state Regional Water Quality Control Board, the regional board did not intend an ASBS designation for Carmel Bay.

The Regional Water Quality Control Board did not include Carmel Bay in its list of biologically sensitive or special areas in 1975, Jones recalled last week.

He said that the regional water board recommendations to the State Water Resources Control Board, which approves the ASBS designation, included Point Pinos on the north side of the Monterey Peninsula, some islands off Santa Cruz, Point Lobos and Julia Pfeiffer Burns State Beach.

"We didn't think that Carmel Bay was any different from the rest of the coast," he said.

•

POINT PINOS TO the Hopkins Marine Biology Station was assigned as ASBS because of its unique marine life, as were the Santa Cruz islands.

Point Lobos was included because it had been singled out as a marine life sanctuary and park, as was Julia Pfeiffer Burns State Beach, he noted.

But the biological life in Carmel Bay, Jones insisted, had nothing special or different from the rest of the Big Sur coast. "If we included Carmel Bay, we might as well designate the whole Pacific Ocean," he said.

•

DR. BETTY DAVIS, a zoologist with the Hastings Natural History Reservation in Carmel Valley, staunchly defends the ASBS designation for Carmel Bay.

"It's a shock to hear that they might consider lifting the ASBS," said Davis, a graduate of the University of California at Berkeley with a background in marine biology.

"It would simplify the sanitary district's disposal problems, but what about the potential impacts on the marine life?" she asked.

The ASBS has already been modified to allow summertime discharge, she noted. She acknowledged that current studies do not indicate any significant damage to the marine life from the sanitary district's effluent. The sanitary district discharges an average of two million gallons per day of treated wastewater into the bay.

"It's not harming the whole bay," Davis said. "But it is having not-so-subtle localized effects. If they ever consider enlarging the discharge, it couldn't be done without consideration for the incremental effects."

The treated wastewater may already be causing changes in the marine environment that in the long run would alter the face of the ocean floor, Davis said.

•

A 1978 STUDY OF the outfall line at the Terminal Island Treatment Plant in Los Angeles Harbor showed "enormous" impacts on the marine and coastal life.

Prepared as part of an Environmental Impact Report for the City of Los Angeles Department of Public Works, the study showed that primary-treated cannery wastes were dumped into the harbor from 1971-74.

"The formerly depauperate harbor experienced an enormous increase in species, higher taxa and populations unprecedented in the area," the study states. The harbor's marine life became dependent on the cannery wastes dumped from the outfall line of the Terminal Island Treatment plant.

When the Terminal Island plant shifted to secondary treatment in 1975, the marine food chain began to decline. The outfall line was later shut down, and by 1978 the bird population was down 40 percent, the fish population had shrunk 10-20 times over and the anchovies had suffered a 100-fold decrease, according to the study prepared by Dorothy F. Soule.

•

DAVIS ACKNOWLEDGED that the secondary-treated effluent pumped into Carmel Bay has not resulted in enormous changes in the marine life. She added, however, that there is evidence some organisms have been driven away by the outfall, while other organisms are attracted to the effluent.

"We can say there is no vast damage at this point," Davis said, "but we just don't know what irreversible changes might be caused if we don't take precautions now.

"It took forever to get the ASBS. Just to undo it because it gets a little inconvenient is not rational," she said. "We should hold tight until the reclamation project flies. We should hope that the state water board also hangs tough."

Will Carmel Sanitary District drop its reclamation project?

Beach Sanitary District for a re-hearing on the ASBS may also be complicating the matter.

•

ZAMBORY OBSERVED, however, that two Carmel directors re-elected last November maintain the majority on the Carmel Sanitary District board that supports the ASBS and reclamation.

"It would be totally against present policy," Zambory said, "for the sanitary district to abandon reclamation and turn its guns on the ASBS."

He urged local residents to write the state water board, expressing their opinions on the matter.

> 'Part of the reason for the ASBS is that the public wanted it. There is an ASBS, and we have no reason for changing it now.' — Jim Nicholas, the Division of Water Quality coordinator for the reclamation project.

"The very life of the reclamation project rests on the state water board decision," Zambory said.

•

RAY DUNHAM, CHIEF of water quality for the state's Legal and Technical Services Division, told this newspaper last week that his staff will present a recommendation to the state water board at its March 25 workshop. He said that the earliest the state board would make a decision would be at its regular April 17 meeting.

"There is a possibility," Dunham said, "that they (the state water board) will not allow additional discharge into the bay."

If the state water board decides to reconsider the ASBS, it would have to schedule a public hearing in Carmel, Dunham said. A 30-day notice would be given before the hearing.

•

JIM NICHOLAS, THE Division of Water Quality coordinator for the reclamation project, said last week that funding was suspended in January because "we don't want them (Carmel Sanitary District) to incur any expense on the design phase until the state water board rules on the ASBS."

Nicholas confirmed that Dunham had scheduled a March 11 meeting with the Pebble Beach Sanitary District board to discuss its petition for a re-hearing on the ASBS.

"We want to know what their feelings are, and what action they feel the state board should take," Nicholas said. He added that he and Dunham were aware that the ASBS was supported by a majority of the Carmel Sanitary District board.

NICHOLAS ACKNOWLEDGED that "part of the reason for the ASBS is that the public wanted it.

"There is an ASBS, and we have no reason for changing it now," he said, although he added that the state board would consider technical arguments against the ASBS.

The Carmel Sanitary District was forced into seeking the additional discharge into the bay by a decision that was made before the reclamation project was proposed, according to Zambory.

"Our decision years ago was not to hook up to the regional sewage treatment plant," he said.

•

THE MONTEREY COUNTY Regional Sanitation District plans to build a regional treatment plant in Castroville, providing sewage disposal services for the Monterey Peninsula.

A trunkline for the peninsula was constructed from Pacific Grove to Monterey after the Carmel Sanitary District declined to join the project.

When the Carmel Sanitary District asked if it could pipe its excess reclaimed wastewater to the regional plant, Zambory said, the Monterey County Regional Sanitation District claimed that the trunklines did not have the capacity. Zambory added that the California Regional Coastal Commission has decided that the trunklines could provide the capacity for the Carmel Sanitary District.

> 'It would be totally against present policy for the sanitary district to abandon reclamation and turn its guns on the ASBS. The very life of the reclamation project rests on the state water board decision.' — Zambory.

Because a final determination on the capacity issue is in question, Zambory said that the Carmel Sanitary District proposes to store its excess summertime wastewater in a reservoir, then discharge it into the Carmel Bay during the winter months. Most of the summertime wastewater would be disposed on golf courses in the Del Monte Forest and Carmel Valley.

The golf course operators have been reluctant to agree to accept the treated wastewater for irrigation, but letters of intent have been signed by operators of Rancho Canada Golf Club, Pebble Beach Links and the Northern California Golf Association, which operates Spyglass Hill Golf Course.

Despite pleas from developers, property owners

Planners approve CV Master Plan ordinances

FIVE MAJOR ORDINANCES to implement the new Carmel Valley Master Plan were approved Monday by the Monterey County Planning Commission.

Struggling through a five-hour special session, the commissioners also approved the sweeping down-zoning of the 29,000 acres of land in the Valley.

The commissioners turned aside pleas from several large developers, including Arthur Oppenheimer, owner of the 26,000-acre Rancho San Carlos, for changes in the rezoning.

The developers were told that their requests would require amendments to the 20-year Master Plan, which the commission could not consider at this time. The developers will have to present their pleas to the Board of Supervisors, the commissioners said.

Planning Director Ed DeMars said that the supervisors will be scheduled to consider the ordinances at their April 8 or 15 meeting.

Once the supervisors have conducted a public hearing on the ordinances and down-zoning, considered all requests for changes and reviewed the recommendations of the Planning Commission, the Master Plan and its "ordinance framework" will be passed into law and put into action.

> 'If it (the meeting) is not announced, it's not very public. The committee could decide to do it (review applications) in four nights in some local bar. — Commissioner Gary Varga.

•

SUPERVISORS HAD WISHED to begin processing development applications by May 1, but this may be delayed by a lawsuit filed against the county.

The lawsuit filed on behalf of the city of Carmel and Virginia Merz of Carmel Valley asks the supervisors to set aside implementation of the Master Plan until an Environmental Impact Report is prepared and considered.

The Master Plan, which allows for 2,500 new units in the Valley in the next 20 years, includes a controversial quota and allocation system to rate and approve all subdivisions. The lawsuit declared that the supervisors erred in simply adopting a "negative declaration" for the Master Plan.

The lawsuit was filed in Monterey County Superior Court on March 5, and should be scheduled for its first hearing within one month.

•

THE COMMISSIONERS discussed at length Monday night the proposed citizens evaluation committee that will review and score all subdivision applications in the Valley.

The five-member committee, to be appointed by the supervisors, will have the authority to score each application according to an elaborate point system in the Master Plan. The scoring, based on visual impact, impact on biological resources, land use and hazards to public safety, will be the basis of consideration for each plan as it is reviewed by the Planning Commission and supervisors.

The scoring by the citizens committee forms the first critical step in a long list or "ladder of steps" that each application must clear. Applications will be arranged according to scores into "flights" that will be reviewed every six months by the Planning Commission and supervisors.

•

COMMISSIONER MARC DEL Piero questioned whether so much should be delegated to the committee.

He also insisted that the committee's meetings need not be publicized, like the Planning Commission and supervisors' meetings, with legal notices in the newspapers. It would be enough for the Planning Department to simply notify the applicant and the committee when a meeting is scheduled, he said.

"We have to be fiscally responsible," said Del Piero, who is running for the First District (North County) Supervisorial seat. "We can't provide all the envelopes and stamps to notify adjoining property owners, or pay for advertisements in the newspapers for this citizens committee."

•

COMMISSIONER GARY VARGA countered, "If it (the meeting) is not announced, it's not very public. The committee could decide to do it (review applications) in four nights in some local bar."

Chairman Joseph Sullivan noted that the "process will not be any worse" than is currently allowed if notice is not published in the newspapers. "There is presently no notice until an application reaches the Planning Commission," said Sullivan, a candidate for the Fourth District Supervisorial seat.

The committee meetings have to be conducted regularly and with public notice, insisted Commissioner William Peters of Carmel Valley.

Peters, a candidate for the Fifth District Supervisorial seat, suggested that the applicant be required to provide stamped envelopes to the Planning Department to notify adjoining landowners, and that the committee's meetings be scheduled with public notice of the schedule every six months, and notice 10 days in advance of any change in the schedule.

•

DEPUTY COUNTY COUNSEL Jose Ramos confirmed that Peters' proposal met the letter of the law, requiring notice to persons whose property will be affected by a subdivision.

Senior County Planner Dave Young said that the committee's meetings would probably be scheduled once a month, depending on the workload, and would be conducted in a public meeting place in the Valley.

Del Piero noted that although the committee will serve strictly in an advisory capacity, it will have the authority to "decide the fate of applications."

It was stated that the committee scores each application, and if it assigns a low score, it can cast an uncertain fate over a proposal. The developer will have the right to revise his application and re-submit it to the committee for another scoring, but it is the committee's discretion when to consider the revised application.

•

DEL PIERO SAID: "Does the applicant have the right of appeal? What if the committee sets a hearing ahead six months? An application could be stalled indefinitely through arbitrary decisions of the committee."

Peters insisted that Del Piero had used and "abusive example." He said, "Let's assume they (the committee) are going to do good. A developer could also return time and time again with an application and tie up the works if we allow it."

Sullivan defended the committee's authority, saying it would act in good faith as much as developers will want the process to "work for themselves by submitting good applications." He did not think that there would be "sufficient problems to clog up the works."

The commissioners agreed to require that the committee must schedule a re-hearing for an application on its next available agenda.

•

"I HAVEN'T BEEN TREATED fairly in the Master Plan," charged Arthur Oppenheimer, sole trustee of Rancho San Carlos, which lies south of Carmel Valley.

He said that 11 percent of the Master Plan area covers part of his property. "Half of the acres that we eventually plan to develop are under the plan," he said, adding that the proposed zoning for his land was rural residential, 2.5 acres per unit minimum.

"I don't want things taken away from me. I should have 2-acre zoning, not the proposed 2.5-acre zoning," Oppenheimer said.

He insisted that the southern boundary line of the Master Plan had been "arbitrarily drawn many miles inland" to his property from the natural ridgeline of the Valley.

He also noted that he owns 40 acres of flatland directly south of Hacienda Carmel, and another 100 acres to the west. Both parcels are planned for development, but proposed for 2.5-acre zoning.

•

THE COMMISSIONERS EXPLAINED to Oppenheimer that he was coming to the county too late with his concerns, and that he should have addressed the matter of the boundary when the plan was being discussed last year.

Peters noted that the boundary line was taken from the former Master Plan and was also the original sectional line.

•

ATTORNEY DON HUBBARD, representing the Odello family, argued that the rural residential (one-acre minimum) zoning proposed for the Odellos' 134-acre parcel was "not consistent with the provisions of the Master Plan."

He insisted that it was the supervisors' intention when they approved specific provisions for the Odello land east of Highway 1 and south of the Carmel River that it would allow for visitor accommodation and retail uses.

> 'I haven't been treated fairly in the Master Plan. I don't want things taken away from me. I should have 2-acre zoning, not the proposed 2.5-acre zoning.' — Arthur Oppenheimer, sole trustee of Rancho San Carlos.

The Odello family wants to build 97 condominiums, a 200-unit hotel and farmers market on the farmland.

•

PETERS RESPONDED THAT Hubbard was "raising a straw man." He insisted that it was the supervisors' intention only to allow the Odellos' Specific Plan to be acceptable in the Master Plan.

"The supervisors never intended that the Master Plan would state that a hotel is to be developed on the Odello land," he said. Peters added that it was the intent to include the Odello land in the lower Valley Area of Development Concentration (ADC), and that the Master Plan allows hotel development in the ADC.

Hubbard argued that the supervisors intended for the zoning to specifically allow for all the options in the Odello Specific Plan, that is the hotel, farmers market and condominiums. The rural residential zoning, he said, would not allow for the commercial and hotel uses.

Peters, supported by DeMars, noted that there is no county zoning that would apply to three separate uses.

Del Piero said it was fruitless to "try and second guess the supervisors." He suggested that the Odello family request be referred to the supervisors who could issue a clarification of their intent.

•

A CHANGE IN the proposed rezoning was also requested by Rene Sonne, representing the owner of the Tantamount Theater in Carmel Valley.

Sonne said that owner Francois Martin wanted to rebuild the theater, which burned down in 1978, at a site half a mile east of Carmel Valley Village. The problem, Sonne said, was that the property, currently zoned for commercial use, was to be rezoned rural residential by the Master Plan.

Noting that the 7.5-acre parcel had been zoned commercial since 1946, Sonne asked the commissioners to waive the rezoning in order to allow the theater to relocate there.

> 'The supervisors never intended that the Master Plan would state that a hotel is to be developed on the Odello land.' — Commissioner William Peters.

Peters said that the property could be rezoned rural residential (one-acre minimum) and it would still allow the theater if it were a "teaching facility."

"If you teach puppetry at the theater, it will be allowed under the proposed zoning," Peters said.

Peters' proposal drew groans of disbelief from his fellow commissioners.

Commissioner Gary Varga of Carmel quipped: "Mr. Hubbard (the Odellos' attorney), why don't you propose a convention center with lectures on how to grow artichokes?"

•

VARGA AND SULLIVAN agreed that the theater would be better located on the site east of the Village than at its current location in a residential neighborhood, but they insisted it would require an amendment to the Master Plan to change the proposed zoning.

Sonne was told to take his plea to the supervisors.

Attorney Thomas Jamison, representing the developers of the proposed 77-lot High Meadow II subdivision, was given the same advice. The commissioners decided that although his client had a reasonable argument to retain the present less stringent zoning, Jamison would have to take his request to the supervisors.

Architect Sabastian Bordonaro insisted that a 24-foot maximum building height limitation in the Valley was not reasonable. He insisted it would not allow for well-designed two-story homes or roof-top solar panels.

The commissioners agreed to change the rural residential zoning ordinance to allow for a 28-foot building height, and referred the matter of solar panels to the Planning Department for study and recommendation.

New money for CV Ranch project

LANDMARK LANDS Company of Oklahoma, the developer of Carmel Valley Ranch, has sold the building and marketing rights to its first 140 condominiums.

The general contractors' rights were transferred for an undisclosed sum to Hensley and Cunningham, a Los Altos development firm.

Nick Marotta, director of real estate for Landmark Lands Co., denied last week that Landmark was withdrawing from the project, or that financial problems had caused it to turn over the first phase of housing construction.

•

HENSLEY AND CUNNINGHAM will construct the condominiums according to the plans approved for the project, Marotta said. The units, ranging in size from 1,933 to 2,481 square feet, will sell for an average of $275,000, he said.

Sale of the 140 condominiums will bring Hensley and Cunningham an estimated $39 million.

The Los Altos construction firm of O'Brien and Hicks, Inc. has been hired to build the condominiums, Marotta said. The first 80 units will be completed by October, he said, with the other 60 scheduled for construction in 1981.

•

LANDMARK LANDS CO. is continuing with construction of the golf course, clubhouse and $1 million sewage treatment plant for the development, Marotta said.

"We had our hands full, so we unloaded the construction rights to the 140 condominiums," he said.

"Somebody has to build them (the condominiums)," he said, adding that it was not known who will build the remainder of the units.

The Carmel Valley Ranch Specific Plan calls for 500 condominiums, a 100-unit hotel and golf course. All 500 units however, are not guaranteed for construction; at least 100 are subject to approval through the new Carmel Valley Master Plan.

•

THE DEVELOPMENT HAS been delayed by controversy over its size. Numerous opponents have fought the project through the county planning process and by lawsuits.

Asked if the delays had resulted in financial problems for Landmark Lands Co., Marotta said; "The company is in no financial trouble at all. Stock for Landmark Lands Co. has never been higher."

Howard Hayes, a stockbroker for Merrill Lynch, confirmed last week that the development company stock had reached a high of 19 points before dropping to 17½ points.

"It's pulled back only 1½ points against tremendous pressure on the down side of the market," Hayes said. "I'd say the stock is doing pretty good."

NOTICE OF THE PROJECT sale was revealed at the Feb. 13 meeting of the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association by former CVPOA president Douglas Despard.

Despard said last week that he "stumbled onto it by accident." He refused to elaborate.

He said, however, "We would like to know the reasons. A permit is given to Landmark Lands Co., and suddenly Hensley and Cunningham comes on the scene.

"There's something going on there," he said.

•

ERNIE VOSSLER, vice president of operations for Landmark Lands Co., confirmed that Hensley and Cunningham will build and sell all of the first 140 condominiums.

He said that Landmark Lands Co. "is not out of the project in any sense.

"For the construction loans we had to get the project in their (Hensley and Cunningham's) name," he said. He refused to disclose the amount that Hensley and Cunningham paid for the general contractors' rights.

•

WILLIAM PETERS OF Carmel Valley, a member of the county Planning Commission and candidate for the Fifth District Supervisorial seat, said that the transfer was not uncommon.

"It's what 10,000 other developers do. Instead of being the general contractor, they sell the rights to another firm," he said.

Carmel Rotary Club celebrates 30th year

The Carmel Rotary Club celebrated the 30th anniversary of its founding last Wednesday, March 5.

Highlight of the meeting was the announcement that three members of the club were awarded Paul Harris Fellowships: Clayton Neill Jr., Tom Brown and Chuck Pearson, all former presidents, were named fellows in recognition of gifts of scholarships to deserving youngsters to study abroad.

Former presidents Fred Stanley and Hugh Smith presided at the meeting.

Six of the charter members of the club were also present: Walter Nielsen, Gunnar Norberg, Derek Rayne, Jim Rowe, Bob Spencer and Bob Stanton.

During the last 30 years, it was announced the club has given more than $60,000 in gifts and donations to the community to assist in programs at Community Hospital, the Boy Scouts, Carmel Foundation and a host of other organizations. This is in addition to the tens of thousands of dollars the club has raised for international scholarships.

History of Carmel Rotary Club traced

THE CARMEL ROTARY Club was issued its charter on March 10, 1950. Corum Jackson, then owner of Carmel Realty Co., was the first president.

Jackson helped organize the club after the Monterey Rotary Club offered its sponsorship in December 1949.

On Feb. 1, 1950, the organizational meeting of the Carmel Rotary Club was conducted at what is now the Cypress Inn.

Three of the 30 charter members are still members: Robert Spencer, Gunnar Norberg and James Rowe.

Other charter members were Corum Jackson, Wesley Kergan, Joseph McCarthy, Robert Stanton, Everett Smith, Cyrus Johnson, Frank Murphy, Edwin Ewig, Horace Lyon, James Finley, Walter Nielsen, Charles Scoville, Michael Gould, Frank Sowell, Andrew Wiemann, Earl Price, Gail Chandler, Richard Bower, Thomas Perry, Edison Holt, Paul Clampett, Arthur Shand, Charles Allaire, Derek Rayne, Cree Wilder, the Rev. Michael O'Connell and Sidney Dibble.

•

THE CHARTER NIGHT Party was at Mission Ranch on April 1, 1950. Party chairman was Frank Murphy, who became the second president of the club.

Two Carmel Rotary Club presidents, Richard Catlin and Walter McCloud, have become district governor.

The first meeting place for the Carmel Rotary was the Cypress Inn, then known as La Ribera Hotel. The club moved its luncheon meetings to the Highlands Inn. In early 1952, members decided to meet inside the city of Carmel and shifted to the Normandy Inn. On Sept. 4, 1952, the club began meeting in La Playa Hotel, where it now meets.

In 1954, the club assumed its first major community responsibility when it sponsored Carmel Boy scout Troop No. 32. The first troop committee chairman was Gunnar Norberg, who served until 1959. Bill Cranston succeeded him.

Ed Bissantz produced the first Club Bulletin.

A father and son have been club presidents. Everett Smith was president in 1958-59. His son, Hugh Smith, was club president in 1974-75.

•

IN APRIL 1961, Carmel Rotary helped the new Community Hospital expand. The club gave $5,000 to furnish a waiting room and an emergency ward. Club donations, along with donations by individual Rotarians, notably J.O. Handley, increased this initial amount by $25,000.

The following year it was projected that Carmel Rotary contributions to hospital improvements would reach $35,000.

In 1964, the club gave a $1,750 hypothermia unit to the hospital. Also that year, Handley proposed the club start a $5,000 Cobalt Fund. He contributed the first $1,000.

Many other projects, including scholarship funds, have been substantially aided by the Carmel Rotary Club in its 30 years.

Father Farrell's Wisdom

'Our task is to clean up our Dream State'

By the REV. LARRY FARRELL

The March 5 invocation delivered to the Carmel Rotary Club to mark its 30th anniversary

Our club was founded when Rotary was 45 years old — it is now 75 and both International Rotary and Carmel Rotary must have been doing many things right or they both would have ceased to exist years ago.

O Lord, help us to continue to walk or even to run on the road of service to others above self. The Soviets are past masters in the art of attack as the best form of defense and in the face of American criticism of the bloody invasion of Afghanistan they have launched a barrage of criticism.

Tomas Constantinovich Kolesnickenko of Pravda wrote his impression of the California Dream: "California has lost its glow as a guiding star. She leads America in suicide, mental illness, divorce, alcoholism, homosexuality, narcotics addiction and all forms of crime and violence. It has the world's largest bank and the most bankruptcies. It has the highest living standards for the bourgeois and the lowest for the Mexican population. The cult of individual liberty has spawned the KKK, the John Birch Society and the American Nazi Party. California is the classic example of the moral and social decadence of the capitalistic society. I want no part of it."

I wonder how many of his readers would take California with all her faults? However, many of Kolesnickenko's charges are true and it is our task to clean up our Dream State. Since all reform has to start somewhere let it start with us.

Thanks Ivan Ivanovitch for telling us it's time for spring cleaning and Nicklaiavich Tvanich doesn't need to tell us that we need a big broom.

Despite court ruling

County won't say 'uncle' on road dedication

MONTEREY COUNTY HAS refused to say "uncle" in a long-standing dispute with Harold Saunders of Carmel Valley over dedication of part of his property for the widening of Carmel Valley Road.

The county Board of Supervisors voted 4-1 last week to require a dedication of 4,000 square feet from Saunders despite a Monterey County Superior Court order that the county abdicate its stand on the dedication.

Saunders, who has sued the county three times to set aside the road easement as a condition to his commercial development in Valley Hills Center, charged that "they (the supervisors) just made like the judge's ruling didn't matter."

Judge A. Richard Barelli signed the court order that "commands" the supervisors to set aside the requirements for the dedication. The court directs the supervisors to issue the zoning permit without the dedication.

•

"I THOUGHT IT WAS down to the wire," said an incredulous attorney Robert Wellington, representing Saunders.

Wellington said that it was clear from the court order that the county had no recourse but to issue the zoning permit without the dedication. He charged that the supervisors' action "flies in the face of the court order."

"It's like someone who doesn't want to say 'uncle' when they should," he fumed.

Wellington will return to Judge Barelli's court to seek a 'show cause' order to determine why the supervisors should not be held in contempt of court and fined a maximum of $1,000 for disobeying the order.

•

SAUNDERS HAS PROPOSED an additional retail-commercial building for his shopping center at Carmel Valley Road and Valley Greens Drive, 3½ miles from Highway 1.

The county approved the zoning permit for the structure last year with the condition that Saunders dedicate a 500-foot right-of-way at the shopping center for the future widening of Carmel Valley Road to four lanes.

County Zoning Administrator Robert Slimmon attached the dedication of 8,000 square feet of property within the official plan lines as a condition of the zoning permit.

The supervisors denied an appeal from Wellington that the dedication be deleted. Wellington had argued that it was unfair to require the owner to provide 8,000 square feet of property in exchange for a 2,400-square-foot building.

•

IT WAS THE SECOND time the supervisors had voted to uphold the condition, despite a 1969 Superior Court ruling that it be deleted.

Because of the delay caused by that lawsuit, the zoning permit expired, forcing Saunders to re-file an identical application.

Slimmon granted the zoning permit with 12 conditions, including the road dedication. Saunders appealed to the supervisors. After his appeal was denied, he filed suit for what amounted to the third legal round that resulted in Judge Barelli's court order.

Slimmon's rationale has been that the proposed retail-commercial building would increase traffic at the shopping center. He has referred to a policy adopted in 1968 that "all necessary road improvements including right-of-way shall be provided by the developer (when commercial use is dependent on the highway system)."

Slimmon also noted in his written decision of June 14, 1979, that the official plan lines for the widening of Carmel Valley Road have been adopted and they include the dedication of Saunders' property.

•

THE COUNTY PUBLIC Works Department, in a report dated Feb. 28, 1980, found that the four-lane widening of Carmel Valley Road is vital to provide safe turns into the shopping center.

The Carmel Valley Road access point to Saunders' shopping center has been cited on the county critical list of intersections suffering three or more collision per year in 1976 through 1979, the report notes.

"The proposed four-lane widening will mitigate the danger," it states, "with channelization for left turns." The report supports the road dedication.

•

DEPUTY COUNTY COUNSEL Jose Ramos advised the supervisors last week that they could satisfy the court order by approving a dedication of half of the 8,000 square feet.

Ramos noted that Judge Barelli's order states that "it appears that a dedication of a lesser amount of property would be supported by the facts."

The order, however, goes on to find that "evidence fails to demonstrate that (the) proposed development would create more traffic to an extent that the public needs require the dedication."

Ramos acknowledged in a statement to this newspaper that Barelli's order found "no reasonable relationship of the dedication to increased traffic."

Ramos requested that the county staff provide more details for the road dedication, and that these details be submitted to the court.

Supervisor Sam Farr voted against the dedication, observing that he felt it was "not reasonable" to resist the court order.

'Nature's cutest bandits'

Raccoons provoke chuckles and curses in Carmel

By KEITH YATES

TO SOME, A RACCOON is nothing short of nature's cutest bandit — the most endearing, playful critter to wear a mask.

To others, including a growing number of Carmel residents, members of the Procyon lotor species are a genuine menace — threatening their property, pets and peace of mind.

•

CARMEL ANIMAL CONTROL Officer Valorie Baumgart told the Pine Cone that she has been receiving an unusually high number of complaints about raccoons.

"The Los Padres fire (in late summer, 1977) forced wildlife to move," she said. "A lot of wildlife, including raccoons, moved to the Monterey Peninsula. And Carmel's trees and secluded areas make a natural habitat for them.

"A lot of people consider them real cute," Baumgart said, "and a lot consider them pests. They're both."

She said that she has received complaints of raccoons tearing the shingles off roofs and attacking dogs, raccoons knocking down garbage cans and digging up lawns, and raccoons prowling private premises, putatively preparing to plunder the pea patch.

In short, raccoons are raising a ruckus, and it's got Baumgart hopping.

•

BAUMGART SAID SHE has three "have-a-heart" humane traps for miscreant coons. She said that she will set a trap for the animals if they repeatedly terrorize a location.

She added that the traps are not every effective. "One raccoon will go in after the food and get trapped," she said. "His buddies will come along and work the latch till they've sprung him free. They're wise to the trick."

For all their cunning, the raccoons cannot seem to master the art of extricating themselves from garbage dumpsters. Baumgart said that she is frequently called on to get the creatures out of restaurant dumpsters. "They get stuck in there and wait for someone to come along and let them out," she said.

Baumgart noted that most raccoons find nothing shameful or ignominious about lodging themselves in garbage bins. "Heck, I guess to a raccoon, getting stuck in a dumpster is like us holing up in a fancy French restaurant," she said.

The animals should not be extracted from dumpsters or otherwise be handled, she cautioned. She said that they are unpredictable and will bite — and they can carry rabies.

•

"ONCE YOU'VE FED THEM, they expect that you'll keep on feeding them indefinitely. They keep coming around for more food. If the person has moved away or stops feeding them, the animals get mad and will terrorize the property," Baumgart said.

She added that if people "would only stop feeding them, we'd have half the problem licked."

•

RACCOONS ARE ESPECIALLY active at this time of year, according to Monterey SPCA Wildlife Director Pat Quinn. "The mothers are looking for a place to have their babies this spring," she said. "Also, they need to eat more when they're pregnant."

She added that the pregnant raccoons can have up to eight babies per litter. They can have one litter a year.

Quinn agreed that the number of raccoons in the county this year is unusually high. "However," she said, "nature has a way to deal with the problems. Next year, natural events may reduce the raccoon population." She said that distemper is a natural cause of death for raccoons. Cars, dogs and people are other leading causes.

MASKED RASCALS LIKE this one are provoking both chuckles and curses in the Carmel area. Carmel Animal Control Officer Valorie Baumgart says that behind that mask and those beguiling eyes is an animal that would love to dig up your lawn, tear the shingles off your roof, bite your dog and get stuck in your garbage can. "Other than that," she concludes, "they're real cute." (Alan McEwen photo)

CARMEL ANIMAL CONTROL Officer Valorie Baumgart extends an "open invitation" to roguish raccoons. The cage is one of three that Baumgart uses to catch the troublesome critters. The real trouble, Baumgart says, is that the captured coons call their cohorts in to wiggle the door open — and off they go! (Alan McEwen photo)

•

BAUMGART SAID THAT there are several ways to discourage visits by uninvited raccoons.

One is to fasten the lid to a garbage can with hooks, available at hardware stores.

Another method is to distribute mothballs liberally in the frequented locations. This is particularly effective before the pregnant raccoons select a place to have their babies. The animals do not like the smell, Baumgart said.

A third and somewhat unusual method is to play loud rock music, according to Quinn.

"It's amazing how intensely raccoons dislike the Rolling Stones and other pop favorites," she said. "Beethoven and Bach seem to agree with raccoons at any volume. But just turn up a little rock 'n' roll, and away they go."

Quinn noted that it is only fitting that there is no local rock group called The Raccoons.

•

BAUMGART SAID THAT she has heard a lot of theories as to why raccoons perpetually wear masks. "I heard one fellow say that coons wear masks so that when they go down to the rivers to catch fish, the fish won't recognize them as coons."

Baumgart said that the fellow believed it himself. "The guy said that your average fish isn't as smart as your average coon, so that it could be a trick on the part of the coon," she said.

Baumgart said she wasn't sure of the validity of the theory. But she admitted that raccoons are pretty smart — smarter than fish anyway.

"Nature works in strange ways," she said.

Planners to tackle transient rentals law again

THE CARMEL PLANNING Commission will reconsider a policy on transient rentals at its March 19 meeting at City Hall.

The commissioners will examine findings of the Land Use Committee, and comments by City Attorney George Brehmer. It will also take into account observations by the Carmel City Council during its public hearing on the subject last Sept. 4.

The Land Use Committee met Wednesday, March 12, to consider the matter.

The Planning Commission recommended an ordinance on transient rentals to the council on July 18. The proposal would have created three exceptions to the present ordinance, which bans rentals of homes or parts of homes in the residential (R-1) district for less than 30 days.

•

THE FIRST EXCEPTION would have allowed the use of houses by friends or relatives of the owners in which no money or thing of value was exchanged for the occupancy.

The second exception would have allowed absentee homeowners to make their Carmel homes available to guests, as long as no money or other means of rent was paid for the occupancy.

The third exception would have allowed Carmel residents — defined as persons residing at a Carmel address for at least 270 days per year — to rent their homes to paying guests for periods of not less than one week while the owners are on vacation or business out of town.

Brehmer has suggested that a permit be required for uses under the third exception. That permit, according to Brehmer, would require an application under penalty of perjury, and could be made to cover a specified time period — for example, for three months — instead of requiring separate application for each occupancy during that period.

•

AT THE SEPT. 4 PUBLIC hearing on the proposed ordinance, Councilman Helen Arnold said that a transient rental should be defined as occupancy in a home in the R-1 district for less than six days.

Mayor Gunnar Norberg observed that the proposed ordinance would do nothing to increase the opportunities for low- and moderate-income housing.

Councilman Les Gross added that the 270-day residence requirement should have no bearing on the permit procedure.

•

PLANNING COMMISSION CHAIRMAN Robert Stephenson told the Pine Cone earlier this week that "the sense on the commission is we liked the proposed ordinance the way it was, and we'll send it back to the City Council. However, we can certainly correct any mistakes in it if the city attorney or member of the council thinks that there are mistakes in it."

Action on the transient rentals issue was delayed because a letter from Brehmer to Planning Director Bob Griggs was "lost in the shuffle," according to Griggs. He added that the commission "has had its hands full" with other matters, too.

Brown stuns coastal board with second kitchen comments

CARMEL CITY COUNCILMAN Mike Brown stunned the Regional Coastal Commission at the March 6 public hearing at City Hall when he stated that the council had drafted its policy on second kitchen units "because we knew you (the coastal commission) wanted to see some sort of policy — it was always hanging over our heads."

He added that there hadn't been "any hard negotiations for the purchase of the Patterson property" in the six years of his tenure on the council.

Commissioner Barbara Shipnuck asked Brown if the council's policy on second kitchens was included in the Local Coastal Program only "because the sword of Damocles of the commission would come down if there were no included policy?"

She asked Brown if the council plans to pursue the policy or just put it in as "window dressing" housing policy so that the commission would recommend that the state pass the plan.

> Councilman Mike Brown told the coastal commission he "wouldn't say whether second kitchens will meet (Carmel's) low- to moderate-income housing needs."

Apparently surprised by his own statement, Brown looked at the clock and replied: "My God, it's late!"

He said that he "wouldn't say whether second kitchens will meet (Carmel's) low-to-moderate-income housing needs."

•

COMMISSIONER ROBERT NIX asked Brown if the city plans to purchase the Patterson property, comprising four lots between the city-owned beach and San Antonio Avenue, 370 feet north of Ocean Avenue.

Nix and other commissioners stated that the city should have a time limit on purchase of the property. "It's not fair to the landowner (Jack Patterson) to keep dragging on and on," said Commissioner James Hughes, "while the owner is prohibited from developing his property and must wait for who knows how many years while the city decides whether it wants to buy the land or not."

The city considered buying the property in February 1971 when it was appraised by the city at $75,000-$80,000. Patterson wanted $240,000.

The council tried again in November 1973. The appraisal was $247,000; the city decided not to pursue negotiations.

City staff now estimates the property to be worth $750,000-$1 million.

Shipnuck told the Pine Cone that Brown's testimony on second kitchens "raised a great question of good faith" on the part of the council.

She said that she was concerned that the city's second kitchen policy might be "window dressing instead of a good faith attempt to deal with the real problems of low-income housing" in Carmel.

"I took his (Brown's) as an accurate account of how the council came to put together its (second kitchen) policy," she said. "The commission's dialogue with Councilman Brown was a council-commission one, not a Mike Brown-commission one."

She added that she "can't accept the lateness of the hour as an excuse" for Brown's statement. "It was only 10 p.m.," she said. "He previously said that the City Council meetings went on until one o'clock in the morning. Surely, then, 10 p.m. is not a late hour for these matters."

•

SHIPNUCK SAID THAT Brown's comments "bring into question the whole housing policy" of the Carmel Local Coastal Program.

She said that "poverty in Carmel is twice that of Monterey and Salinas." The LCP should mandate low-income housing, she declared.

"We need some real housing policies and I don't see one in this plan," she said.

•

Shipnuck was supported by Chairman Mary Henderson.

"The housing element in this plan will not fly," Henderson said, referring to the state's likely rejection of the LCP housing section.

The commissioners also suggested clarification and/or re-study of the number of second kitchens in the residential district, the city's tree ordinances, beach area parking spaces displaced by scenic walkway, and bicycle racks.

> 'Poverty in Carmel is twice that of Monterey and Salinas. We need some real housing policies and I don't see one in this plan.' — Coastal Commissioner Barbara Shipnuck.

•

THE LCP, WHICH was approved unanimously in its current form by the Carmel City Council at its Feb. 11 meeting, will now be referred to coastal commission and Carmel city staffs for study and possible amendment. The areas under study for possible revision include housing policies and the Patterson property.

Henderson said the commission will conduct a second hearing on the Carmel LCP on March 31 at the earliest and probably "sometime in April" in Santa Cruz.

LES GROSS'S "MARK" on the council has been achieved. He laid it on with a trowel.

•

CLOSE TO $210,000 is the estimated revenue for the city for the year if the new $5 parking ticket fee is put through. My question is — just where is this money going to go?

Suppose that it's allocated for parking...five years worth of that money alone and you've got a million bucks, plus; that could build a realistic underground parking garage. And that's not counting in-lieu parking fees, which I consider a rip-off that is improperly managed.

If our councils could manage to look a bit further than their noses and focus down the road a bit, we might have some decent solutions to these problems.

I suggest that we all listen very carefully to what the candidates have to say on these (and all) subjects. We may learn quite a bit!

•

THE "BREATH OF fresh air" is the phrase used to describe Valerio Biondo — the fourth mayoral candidate.

He was most enjoyable to see and hear at the Carmel Business Association breakfast last week. His remarks were valid and certainly pointed — pointed right at our foibles.

His papers are ready to be filed this week for the write-in candidacy. Hum — it just might serve everybody right!

•

MUST SAY, I'M ENJOYING all these breakfasts. Breakfast is not my favorite meal unless someone else cooks it. And I haven't figured out yet if they're free, or very costly. Guess it depends on how much one contributes to the various functions!

•

WHAT INTERESTS ME most is the apparent loss of apathy of the voters of Carmel. Things are looking up!

Old Carmel has joined the information train, and will be posting its own "20 Questions" for the candidates to answer in writing. (Gee, these guys and gals are really having to work this time around.)

The more, the merrier! Every group that offers its conversation, debates, forums, questionnaires, or whatevers, only increases the voter's ability to judge for himself the best qualified person to hold office.

Carmel Citizens Committee, Common Sense Committee, Old Carmel, and everyone else — you are all to be applauded!

So far, you have been told

Who's your leader
And who he is.

THE GRAND (?) OLD MAN: Experienced; knows all the ropes, and where the bodies are buried. Casting: Lionel Barrymore.

THE DARK ONE: Seems calm, but attacks unexpectedly. Played by Peter Lorre.

THE HERO: Leads all parades, kisses babies, always upstages fellow actors; a scenery chewer. Played by John Barrymore.

THE LADY: Played by Ethel Barrymore.

THE PROFESSOR: Totally sincere. Played by Jimmy Stewart.

THE JESTER: Played by David Wayne.

THE ROCK OF STRENGTH: Whatever happens, he's there, strong and true. Played by Dan Blocher.

Fire districts seek fees of $160-$190 per home

PROPERTY OWNERS IN Carmel and Carmel Valley will vote June 3 on fire protection fees ranging from $160 to $190 per year for single-family residences.

The Board of Directors of the Mid-Carmel Valley Fire Protection District at its March 10 meeting approved a resolution that proposes a fee of $190 per year.

The Carmel Valley Fire Protection District board was expected to propose a fee of $160 per year.

The Monterey County Board of Supervisors was scheduled Tuesday to approve fees for the county service areas, including the special fire protection districts around Carmel. Residents within CSA 43, which includes Hatton Fields and Carmel Woods, will face a fee of $160 per year; a fee of $90 per year is proposed for single-family homes in CSA 39 (Aguajito area).

The fees, which are subject to voter approval, are being proposed to replace property tax revenue that was lost as a result of Proposition 13.

The County Service Areas and fire districts will reach the end of their budget reserves this year, and the supervisors announced in February that the county will not distribute state bailout funds to districts that do not establish user fees.

Fees for vacant lots and commercial and industrial properties are also being proposed.

Effective July 1, 1980 the fees will have to be approved by at least two-thirds of the registered voters within each district.

•

"PROP. 13 CUT our taxes in half. We either have to establish user fees, or cut services in half," said Ed Haber, a director of the Mid-Carmel Valley Fire Protection District.

The fire district's income is based on a property tax rate of $1 per $100 assessed valuation, but since Prop. 13, the district has been receiving only 60 percent of its taxes, Haber said. The county collects the property tax, then returns part of it to the district.

In order to balance its budget this year, the fire district received $162,000 in state bailout funds distributed by the county. The state bailout funds, however, fell more than $3 million short of the amount requested this year by all of the special districts. This caused the supervisors to require districts to establish user fees.

•

WITHOUT STATE BAILOUT funds, the Mid-Valley district faces a budget deficit of $170,000 for the coming year, Haber said.

"The directors approved a resolution," he said, "to go before the voters for establishment of user fees.

"The public will have to choose," Haber said, "if it wants fire protection and ambulance services with fees, or if it wants no fees and no services."

He noted that the insurance rating for residences in the district will drop from a Class 6 to Class 9 if the fire station closes. "The added cost in insurance is about the same that people will pay in fees," Haber said.

The department is comprised of four paid firemen, 25 volunteers, the fire station on Carmel Valley Road and several hundred thousand dollars worth of equipment.

A ceiling fee of $190 per year is proposed for single-family residences, and $90 per year for vacant lots, he noted. The fees are based on a standard formula that is being used by other fire districts facing similar financial problems.

•

RON ZEISE, CHIEF OF the Mid-Carmel Valley Fire Protection District, chaired the committee that worked to establish a uniform fee formula for the 12 fire districts in the county.

Computer runs were used to establish the comparative services that fire districts provide for parcels that are either vacant, developed residential, commercial or industrial, Zeise explained.

"Units of benefit" were assigned to the different kinds of parcels: 10 units per vacant lot; 20 units per residential lot, and 40 units or more per commercial or industrial lots. By adding up its total numbers of different parcels, each fire district arrives at a total level of service or benefit to property owners.

The total "units of benefit" are divided into the district's projected budget deficit to determine a fixed rate for the fees. The rate for Mid-Carmel Valley Fire Protection District, for example, came to $9.62 per unit of benefit. It was based on the maximum projected budget deficit over the next three years, Zeise said.

Since a residential lot is equivalent to 20 units of benefit, the owner of a single-family home in the Mid-Carmel Valley Fire Protection District will pay 20 x $9.62, or about $190.

Haber said that theaters, hospitals and convalescent homes are assigned 70 units. Apartment complexes are 40 units; mobile home parks, motels, hotels, private schools and shopping centers are all assigned 60 units, Haber said. He added that the unit designations were derived from state and nation-wide surveys.

•

ZEISE DENIED REPORTS that the fee would be $350 per single-family residence in the district. The $350 figure was suggested by the staff of the county Local Agency Formation Commission, but Zeise said that it failed to take into account 1,000 lots in Carmel Valley that, although vacant, have been approved for construction.

The 400 lots approved for the Carmel Valley Ranch development, and many lots of record, were counted by the district as residential (20 units of benefit) rather than vacant (10 units of benefit), Zeise explained. As the lots are developed, he said, the owners will pay the higher rate, so the district computed the lower fee rate to begin with.

•

THE CARMEL VALLEY Fire Protection District board was expected to approve a rate of $8.48 per unit, according to fire chief Robert Heald. This would mean a $169.60 fee for single-family homes.

The county Public Works Department, which worked with the committee to establish the uniform formula, has proposed an $8 per unit rate for CSA 43, which would amount to $160 per year for single-family residences.

5 aspirants want to succeed Farr

When the filing period closed March 12 for the Fifth District supervisorial race, five persons had announced they were seeking the seat of Supervisor Sam Farr of Carmel.

June 3 is election day.

Candidates for the Fifth District, which covers all of Carmel Valley, Carmel, Pebble Beach and other portions of the Monterey Peninsula, and the coast south to a point 15 miles below Big Sur, are William Peters, Florence Hunter, Neill Gardner, Jim O'Brien and Earl Thorpe.

Peters, 39, is a resident of Carmel Valley. He was appointed a member of the county Planning Commission in 1976 by Farr, and has played a key role in the revision and adoption of the new Carmel Valley Master Plan.

Married and the father of four children, Peters is an educational testing specialist.

He has listed his major objectives in the area of planning and land use as the implementation of the Carmel Valley Master Plan, enforcement of the approved countywide growth management policy and completion of the local coastal planning programs.

Hunter, a Pacific Grove attorney and former administrative assistant to Farr, is expected to split the environmentalist vote with Peters.

She has been a resident of Monterey County since 1958, and worked three years as Farr's administrative assistant. She listed her qualifications as someone who is familiar with the district, its constituency's needs and problems.

Hunter was elected to the Monterey Peninsula College Board of Trustees last November. She is also president of the board of the Ombudsman Program, an organization concerned with care of the elderly in nursing facilities in the county.

Gardner announced his candidacy in February at a banquet in his honor at the Rancho Canada Golf Club in Carmel Valley.

Former publisher of the Pacific Grove Tribune and a 13-year resident of the Peninsula, Gardner declared in his written statement of candidacy: "The Carmel Valley General Plan smells to high heaven. Its point system is an open invitation to political chicanery."

He opposed the establishment in the plan of a system to allocate points and units to developers, with all development proposals competing for approval.

In his first attempt at public office, Gardner listed inflation as "our nation's number one problem."

He is married and a native of Oregon.

Thorpe, 40, lists his occupations as businessman, author and educator. A resident of Monterey, he ran unsuccessfully in the last race for the Monterey City Council.

He is a graduate of the University of Chicago and University of California at Berkeley. As a social scientist, he has been awarded grants for public policy research and lectured at Mills College in Oakland and other colleges and universities.

Thorpe has been a consultant to the Yosemite Planning Team of the National Park Service and South Florida Regional Planning Council. He recently completed a 1979 term as editor of the Poetry Shell, a publication of the Monterey Peninsula.

O'Brien said that the most serious problem facing the county is the financial burden that has followed Proposition 13.

Vice president of accounts for Paine Webber in Monterey, O'Brien said that the county faces more challenges from state and federal measures to reduce government spending.

"Jarvis II is too much, too fast; we've got to take another look at the impact of Prop. 13 so we won't have a serious dislocation of services and jobs," said O'Brien, who added that he has 30 years experience in business management.

He listed as one of his priorities "protection of our unique environment."

He said that growth should be kept within the bounds of the available water supply before additional wells are drilled in Carmel Valley by the California-American Water Co.

O'Brien, 59, is married and has been a resident of Pebble Beach since 1972.

Seeking the seat in the Fourth Supervisorial District, which includes a small portion of Carmel Valley along Los Laureles Grade, are incumbent Michal Moore and Monterey attorney Joseph Sullivan, chairman of the county Planning Commission and the only challenger.

Sullivan ran unsuccessfully against Moore for the Board of Supervisors in 1976.

Running for the 28th Assembly District seat of Henry J. Mello, D-Watsonville, are: Farr, a Democrat whose father, Fred Farr of Carmel, is a former state senator; Ann Welchner, a Republican political activist from Carmel; Kevin La Graff, Mello's administrative assistant; William Murphy, Santa Cruz County treasurer, and Lowell Murphy, a minister from Santa Cruz.

Flanders house rezoned to allow non-profit uses

THE CITY-OWNED Flanders house and the area immediately around it have been rezoned to allow non-profit uses.

The Carmel City Council rezoned .83 acres of the Flanders estate from P-1 to P-2-A use at its meeting Monday, March 10.

A P-1 park zone allows for the preservation and enhancement of the natural state of the property. A P-2-A park allows for the operation of non-profit organizations within a park.

The new zone will allow occupancy of the house by the Carmel Art Institute, a non-profit school.

Art institute owner John Cunningham and retired school custodian David Araujo signed a two-year lease to occupy the building.

The city will not have to widen the driveway from Hatton Road to the Flanders house to accommodate the Carmel Art Institute — City Administrator Doug Peterson.

Araujo moved into the house last month as caretaker. He and Cunningham will each pay $400 per month plus utilities, according to the terms of the contract.

•

THE P-2-A ZONE boundary is a hedge surrounding the house.

The Planning Commission decided to recommend the hedge as a boundary to allow additional working area and privacy for the art students. Previous proposals for the boundaries included the perimeter of the house itself, an area 20 feet around the building, and another, larger area surrounding the building and comprising 1.43 acres.

Because of the difficulty of establishing the "unnatural" boundaries, the commission resolved at its Feb. 4 meeting to recommend use of the .83 acres within the hedge as the new zone.

•

FLANDERS IS THE only area in the city zoned P-2-A, according to Carmel Planning Director Bob Griggs.

The new ordinance passed the first reading at the March 3 council meeting. It will take effect Wednesday, April 9 — 30 days after the final reading last Monday.

•

CITY ADMINISTRATOR Doug Peterson told the Pine Cone that the city will not have to widen the driveway from Hatton Road to the Flanders house.

He said that state law exempts schools with fewer than 10 students from the requirement that the driveway right-of-way be 20 feet wide. The driveway is 14-18 feet wide now.

•

THE CITY PURCHASED the house in 1972 for $275,000 as part of the acquisition of the Flanders Estate.

The Flanders Estate, together with the Doolittle property acquired the year before, comprise the city's Mission Trail Park.

The city has rented or leased the house to private parties and municipal employees in the eight years of its ownership. The house became vacant last May when City Administrator Jack Collins and his family left for Seattle. The council instructed Peterson to find a short-term tenant until the city could develop a long-range plan for the house.

Barrier reverts Oliver Road to residential street again

A SANDBAG BARRIER installed across Oliver Road in Mission Fields has effectively stemmed the heavy flow of vehicle traffic through the neighborhood.

A resident reported last week that "it's become a residential neighborhood again."

Constant auto traffic on the two-lane street prompted the county Public Works Department to erect the barrier in February. Motorists were using Oliver Road as a short cut from Rio Road to Highway 1. The department study found that 1,300 vehicles used Oliver Road in one day.

"You took your life in your own hands if you tried to back out of the driveway," said the resident, who asked not to be identified.

She said that residents requested the barrier. "We were also concerned about kids who ride their bicycles in the street."

•

TRAFFIC HAS ALMOST disappeared, except for residents driving to and from their homes, she said.

Residents can still reach their homes from Rio Road. The short deadend section of Oliver next to Highway 1 only provides access to the Carmel River Inn.

The resident's son reported that a four-wheel drive truck drove over the sandbags last week, dislodging two of the white-painted bags.

The Public Works Department will replace the sandbags with a permanent concrete, landscaped barrier in six months.

Rippling River benefit planned

An evening of dancing and music at Cerrito's Neptunes Table is planned as a benefit for Rippling River in Carmel Valley.

The seafood restaurant and bar on Monterey Fisherman's Wharf is hosting the benefit on Monday, March 17. Proceeds will be collected to pay for craft supplies and improvements at Rippling River, a "hotel for the handicapped."

Scott Beasley, a resident at Rippling River, said that the St. Patrick's Day benefit was organized with the help of the Studio 55 Jazz Band from Monterey Peninsula College.

The evening will also feature music by the Wright Connection, a Peninsula jazz band and Spectrum with Sally Blackburn, a Top 40 disco band. Manta-Ray will provide lounge music.

Admission is $2 at the door. Happy hour begins at 4 p.m., and the benefit is scheduled to run until midnight.

The money will help pay for a solar cover for Ripping River's swimming pool, supplies for the concessions bar and the craft room, Beasley said.

For more information, phone 659-3141, ext. 102.

CITY COUNCIL CALLS FOR BOND ELECTION

On April 14, the date of the municipal election to fill three vacancies on the City Council, there will be an election to determine whether or not the city shall incur a bonded indebtedness of $15,000 for the purchase of a new fire truck and additional fire department equipment.

In addition, Councilman George Wood furnished figures to show how the library funds have been used.

Face of the library bonds, $20,000; accrued interest and premiums on sale of bonds, $5,250.68; face of builders contract, $20,373; architect's fees, over $2,000; the balance was spent on various improvements and additions to the library.

A question had been raised on the library audit system because it was not under jurisdiction of the city. It was pointed out that the library funds were never a part of the city funds, that these monies never passed through the hands of the city clerk and treasurer and therefore lay outside the jurisdiction of the City Council and the field of an audit of municipal accounts.

During the library fireworks, Councilman John Jordan stated that he would be willing to order a new audit of library accounts and would pay for its cost if any error in the books were found, providing Carmelite editor Joe Coughlin, who raised the question, would pay for the audit if the accounts were found correct. The suggestion was not accepted.

WHO STEALS MY PURSE (EDITORIAL)

It is the open season on councilmen. From now until April 14 they may be shot with anything from a splatter-gun to a 16-inch howitzer, though mud will be the ammunition most used. Men who have lived in Carmel not long enough to learn the way to the post office will be the pot-hunters.

The character-assassins will shoot from well-concealed blinds or hide their identity behind libel-proof newspapers. They will use insinuation and innuendo. Their phrases will be carefully chosen to damage reputations, yet dodge criminal responsibility for the slanders.

The opening stench in this campaign of filth came Monday last when an extra of the Carmelite was tossed about the streets with the headline Audit or Whitewash? "When any public officer objects to an audit dating back to a period when that officer was in a position to control or influence the expenditure of public funds, the time has come to act."

Let us try, for the sake of our village, to be square in our political campaigns, as we are in our day-to-day dealings with our fellow citizens. Let us play the game in a sportsmanlike way.

STREET DEPT. CROSSWALK CONFUSION IRKS PLANNERS

The nigh onto three year's feud between the street department and the planning commission, relatively quiescent since the Huckleberry — Juniper Compromise of the Battle of the Ocean Avenue Strip, flared up anew at yesterday afternoon's meeting of the planning commission.

The planning commission had recommended that the street department discontinue painting discontinued lines in the crosswalks, since it leads to confusion in the minds of motorists and pedestrians. The council had kicked the planning commission's recommendation around and hadn't done a thing about it. "They're still painting discontinued lines," said City Clerk Mawdsley.

The chief of police says that it is a safety hazard. What more does the council want, the planning commission wanted to know. So they went on record with a recommendation that the City Council again consider that the crosswalks be painted in the conventional manner.

HOTELMEN LOSE ROUND TWO AGAINST PARKING DISTRICT

The Carmel Business Association supported its parking district committee last night with an overwhelming vote of approval (52-2) for the parking district as proposed by the Business Association and outlined in the resolution of intention passed by the City Council at last week's meeting.

The vote came after two hours' discussion at the quarterly dinner meeting at La Playa Hotel. Robert Stanton presented the hotelmen's objections that the assessment was discriminatory. For several years all new hotels and apartment houses have been required by ordinance to provide off-street parking in a ratio of two-thirds to the number of their accommodations. Other businesses do not provide off-street parking for their customers.

Children's Experimental Theatre guided into 20th year by dedicated founder-director

By JOANNE HODGEN

TWENTY YEARS AGO Marcia Gambrell Hovick agreed to teach the first classes of the Children's Experimental Theatre for a "couple of weeks."

CET now boasts the longest continuous operation of any theater on the Monterey Peninsula and Marcia is still teaching.

To honor her and the Carmel theater school that has reached out to hundreds of thousands of children throughout Monterey County, the 20th anniversary of the Children's Experimental Theatre will be celebrated Saturday and Sunday, March 15-16, with special performances at the Monterey Conference Center, Monterey.

Hansel and Gretel will be staged Saturday at 1 p.m., followed by the Golden Goose at 2:30 p.m. The Staff Players Repertory Company, the adult fund-raising arm of CET, will present Lovers, Lovers, Lovers, an evening of one-act plays about the trials and tribulations of love, at 8 p.m. Saturday. The festivities will end Sunday with an additional performance of the Golden Goose at 2:30 p.m.

•

A SPECIAL ENERGY FLOWS from Marcia Hovick as she describes the beginnings of CET on the Peninsula and the children who have been involved in its creative activities.

"CET began originally as part of the newly formed Community Theater, of which I was a board member," said Mrs. Hovick.

Though the first CET classes were taught in 1960 at the Golden Bough Theatre in Carmel, it really began with 4-year-old Marcia Hovick performing at a children's theater in Tulsa, Okla. Marcia's mother was a very talented woman with no outlets for her creative abilities; she decided that her daughter would never inherit her frustrations.

•

AT THE AGE of 3, Marcia said, she was enrolled in ballet class and at 4 was performing on stage. One memory was sharply etched on her mind: "I remember people sat around the edges and watched. Some of my strongest prejudices stem from that.

"It is up to a children's theater to see that every child involved gets a chance to discover that he or she has gifts," she says.

•

IN 1956, SHE SETTLED on the Monterey Peninsula with her family. By then, she had been involved in children's theater in Baltimore, Birmingham, Bakersfield and Austin and there were a "lot of ideas I wanted to implement."

Her list of rules was relatively short: "Keep it simple; do not waste people's time; and work with good material that respects the feelings of your performers."

•

THE CLASSES BEGAN with 25 little girls, but within two years more than 80 youngsters had enrolled in CET classes.

Courses were conducted at the Golden Bough Theatre where Marcia says the limitations of the physical plant ruled out emphasis on scenery, lights or props. "The emphasis right at first was on the performer," she recalls.

By 1968 CET classes and undertakings had become so ambitious that operations had to move to a larger, more accommodating site. The Indoor Forest Theater, beneath the outdoor stage of the historic theater at Mountain View and Santa Rita was chosen. The following year, CET was incorporated as a non-profit organization.

Mrs. Hovick has since limited enrollment to about 100 youngsters in first grade through high school, "because each child must be given the attention he deserves," she says.

Among the classes CET offers are speech, breathing and articulation, dance and fencing. The older students learn lighting and scenery design. Many of her courses are implemented using theater games, improvisation and pantomime.

•

"I HAVE A GREAT deal of respect for the intelligence of children. They really want to know the truth. I feel that there's a great deal of talking down to children that isn't necessary," Marcis explains.

More than theater arts are taught by CET. "We are concerned," she says, "with how to teach children how to focus and concentrate. Unless an actor is focused he will not communicate an idea to his audience. Learning to taste, see — really feel things — is terribly important and it's one of the things that civilization works against in an age when people are constantly barraged by music, television and radio," she states.

Children are also introduced to a way of objective problem solving that avoids the use of the words right and wrong or good and bad. "What we're involved in is communicating a thought or feeling impulse to another person or to an audience. There is no right or wrong way to do that," she claims.

If a child fails to communicate an idea the first time he or she is encouraged to explore a different avenue of expression. "He doesn't always succeed the first time," so he tries another way.

•

UNLIKE MANY THEATER schools, enrollment is not based on talent auditions. Mrs. Hovick does not believe that a child in his formative years should be judged by his untrained performance.

Parents bring their children to CET on a first-come, first-served basis. Of course, some of the youngsters "are crazy about acting. Many are shy children whose parents and teachers have become concerned. We also get angry children. Once they have become enmeshed in the activities of the classes you can't tell one from another," she says proudly.

With the care and understanding of the teaching assistants "everyone feels free to experiment," she continues. "I know we fail sometimes, but very seldom. There is a great tolerance for diversity here."

•

IMPERATIVE TO THE goals of CET are the teaching assistants, many of whom have graduated from the children's theater only to return.

There are currently 15 CETA-funded positions that have been filled at the children's theater, 10 of which are for theater apprentices.

Among the young assistants who are currently teaching and have attended CET as children are Gwyneth Hovick, Marcia's daughter, who was enrolled from the first grade on and who will perform in Lovers, Lovers, Lovers; Steve Moorer, who began as a CET student in the fourth grade, and will also appear in Lovers. Performing with the Staff Players as well as teaching is Barbara Shuler, who was enrolled in the fifth grade.

Marcia observes they are all "marvelous teaching assistants" who must know how to work with children and elicit creative ideas while not feeding them their own," she says.

•

CET IS NOT LIMITED to classes for Peninsula youngsters. Immediately after its founding in 1960, Mrs. Hovick began a touring company composed of all 25 enrolled youngsters.

The first production taken to local schools was an adaptation of Hawthorne's version of Pandora. Since the children were garbed in togas made out of sheets it could be aptly termed a "bedsheet production," she quipped.

The Travelling Troupe has grown tremendously since 1960. Last year Hansel and Gretel was presented at more than 70 Monterey County schools and reached some 20,000 children.

"During the pat 20 years CET's Travelling Troupe has performed in almost 100 schools from elementary to college, more than 1,500 times before approximately 300,000 young people," Marcia recalls.

There are currently four casts of nearly 50 children who perform throughout the county. Travelling Troupe participation, said Mrs. Hovick, is open to all CET youngsters with at least one year of experience and is the only aspect of the children's theater to require an audition.

•

NO FEES ARE CHARGED for the performances. "Live performance is so important for children to see in our era when they are bogged down in the box," insists Marcia. When they see their peers on stage, the youngsters realize that "they can do it if other children can do it."

Marcia is adamant that no admission is charged. "If we only charged a dime, there would still be a child that could not afford to attend." She credits much of the tour's success to the helpful cooperation of Monterey County school districts.

•

PARENTS PAY A $200 tuition fee when they enroll their children in CET. However, Mrs. Hovick says that tuition covers less than half of the budget.

Like many cultural organizations, funding for CET has become increasingly precarious due to the ravages of inflation.

The children's theater was the first cultural activity in recent years to receive revenue from the county Board of Education. That $2,000 has been bolstered by a small grant from the city of Carmel plus monies from many local charitable organizations including the Crosby Youth Fund, 39 Craftsmen and the Additional performances are scheduled March 16-17, 20-21 and April 11-12. Curtain is at 8 p.m. at the Cherry Foundation, Guadalupe and Fourth, Carmel.

Young violinist shows remarkable talent

By SCOTT MacCLELLAND

THE OLDEST MUSIC association on the Monterey Peninsula, the august Carmel Music Society, has committed the audacity of following the violinistic likes of Jascha Heifetz, Itzhak Perlman and Pinchas Zukerman with a barely known youngster, Stephanie Chase, in a major-scale recital of seasoned virtuoso miniatures and heaven-storming monuments.

And, you ask, on what strength? On a recital Miss Chase gave in Pacific Grove four years ago when she was 16!

Has the Society membership been duped? Is the Society in a state of decline? Has the economic slide touched the artistic core of this honorable tradition?

The answer is an emphatic No!

Stephanie Chase not only represented a red-blooded dedication to the venerable tradition of concert music but displayed a robust technique and remarkable talent.

While our community of violin players and teachers mesured her by the "best" standards, Miss Chase carried forth with a genuine candor and a compelling zest that befit her years and that honored the music.

•

THE SUITE ITALIENNE is an interpretation by its Pergolesi-inspired composer, Igor Stravinsky, of his ballet Pulcinella. Miss Chase made of it a brash, forceful and robust statement, featuring a big and occasionally raw sound.

Her vibrato was given largely to nervous intensity and her palette of colors was narrow, but her attitude was assertive and forthright, an essential ingredient often missing from her polished older colleagues.

In the Beethoven Sonata in C Minor, Op. 30, No. 2 Miss Chase was at her most exposed. Here her 20 years of wisdom were evident. She did not soften with tenderness those numerous Beethovenian moments that, by the composer, foil his awesome forcefulness. The violinist's playing was strong and accurate, but lacked the living breath of phrases and was monochromatic of tone color.

By contrast was the playing of her accompanist, David Garvey (exclusive accompanist to Leontyne Price), who gave subtle expression and impulse to the score.

•

IN THE POEME BY ERNEST Chaussen Miss Chase's sotto voce opening statement was a bit hoarse and the strength of her following playing tended, in the animated sequences, to be rather frantic. The sum effect was one of vigor and authority, giving the piece a virtuosic rather than poetic cast.

The Trois danses fantastiques by Shostakovich was a highlight of the evening, with extraordinary virtuosity and sprightly dazzle as the main events.

The first of three Fritz Kreisler ditties, Liebesfreud, was played, frankly, the way Stephanie Chase plays it, with strength but not graciousness. But in Liebesleid (Love's Sorrow) (not Liebeslied as appeared in the program) a sudden (possibly coached) expression of suave flavor held forth and won over. In Tambourin chinois the swagger and virtuosity were fully deployed. And In Sarasate's Zigeunerweisen all stops were out for extravagant indulgence of flair and fireworks.

A fairly somnambulent audience was able to generate a single encore, the Nocturne in C Sharp Minor by Chopin, an undertaking that proved both exciting and nervous.

•

ACCORDING TO THE Hidden Valley road map of musical events, a new production opened last weekend. That makes three openings in three weeks (to say nothing of the start of a new chamber orchestra season which we will try to get to soon).

What opened last weekend was A Cabaret, a review of various songs from various Broadway musicals put together by the Musical Theater Ensemble.

Sunday afternoon's performance was not as snappy as the show should be (and reputedly was on Friday's opening) but the material is nearly all good and many of the numbers were quite skillfully done.

During the many solo numbers and duets the corps of the ensemble sat at cafe tables at the back of the stage, adding their presence to the otherwise plain stage (the basic Don Giovanni set). The band featured saxophone, guitars, drum set, piano and sections of brass and winds. Mark Watters directed from sax and/or guitar.

The printed program was of little help as many of the numbers were sung by others than those identified. In addition some of the numbers were omitted, at least one was added, and the order of things was changed. Vonna Miller, who is playing Julie in the current Carousel, was not seen Sunday afternoon.

All of this probably does not matter except that having the program tempts one to refer to it.

•

Picking out the highlights of the show starts with the opening number, Willkommen from Cabaret, which was an ensemble tour de force staged and choreographed by Cameron Richards, the dynamic personality who directed the entire production. Richards led the way with his singing and dancing and everyone else joined him in a big and exciting finish.

Kim Mowry was in fine form, dramatically and musically, especially in Makin' Whoopee and a medley of Married from Cabaret and A Quiet Thing from Flora and the Red Menace.

Linden Waddell was excellent in Bill from Show Boat and The Girl that Drives Men Wild from a new show by Bruce Kimmel called Stages. Waddell is one of the few members of this ensemble who really has that big sound and projection necessary for such material on a big stage.

•

CLASS FROM CHICAGO was sung and danced by Juanda Marshall, Eleanor Wylde, Robin Pease and Diane Brussel. The song's language and descriptions are not tame and the entire number was racy and exciting.

Ronda Skolnick did a funny and strong presentation of Adelaide's Lament from Guys and Dolls. Robert Andrews was marvelous in Look at that Face and Who Can I Turn To from Greasepaint.

There were many other successes and plenty of entertainment throughout.

Ensemble members include Bil Barratt, Velveli de Ayxa, Mark Johnston, Michael Judd, Karen McKean, James Meade, Deborah Pierce, Kevin Skiles and John Stenmark.

Variously scheduled performances of A Cabaret will be on through May 17th.

Scott MacClelland is classical music director for KWAV-FM 96.9.

Sebastiani dies, but legend lives

By ROBERT LAWRENCE BALZER

WITH NO FACETIOUS intent implied, there is something almost totally final about a newspaper obituary.

Death, which catches up with all of us, has ended the subject's career. A few weeks ago, at age 66, winemaker August Sebastiani died in his Sonoma home. It is, however, neither rhetoric nor hyperbole to say that the Sebastiani legend lives on.

The story begins in 1893, when the word "California" was still synonymous with "Gold!" and "opportunity" — for the daring.

The "human drift," as Jack London called it, kept on, bringing among the immigrants a 14-year-old boy from Tuscany who spoke no English, had no money beyond the passage paid for his steerage-class ticket.

He was Samuele Sebastiani, with a start in the New World about as meager as could be imagined. He went to work with a hoe in the artichoke fields in Half Moon Bay. In three years, he had saved enough money to buy a team of horses and a wagon that became his way to fortune.

Hauling cobblestones quarried in Sonoma for paving the streets of San Francisco gave him enough money to buy a run-down winery in one corner of the original Mission San Francisco Solano, the last of the chain, founded by Padre Jose Altimira in 1823, now popularly known as Sonoma Mission. With it came one 501-gallon redwood tank. Samuele Sebastiani was in the wine business.

•

THE TOWN OF SONOMA still has surviving landmarks attesting to the ambition and pride of the peasant lad from Tuscany.

There's the Sebastiani Theatre, Sebastiani Dance Hall, Sebastiani Bus Depot, on and on. He even tried to have the town renamed, but the city fathers declined.

In a book written about the People of the Pueblo in 1937, the aging immigrant was described as "wine magnate and capitalist." Not bad for one generation.

•

TODAY, THE SEBASTIANI Winery has a storage capacity of more than two million gallons, with sales reaching six million cases per year and growing.

August Sebastiani inherited the full measure of his father's intensive drive. Blunt to critics and generous to his friends, his lifestyle had gracious parameters benefiting the whole community.

He was devoted to environmental issues, and was a self-taught ornithologist. His migratory bird sanctuary on the edge of his tree-sheltered vineyard in Schellville has been declared a federal preserve. His was the first commercial vineyard to release tens of thousands of ladybugs to combat aphids and leafhoppers in the vineyards instead of spraying with insecticides.

•

IN 1972, WITH HIS sons Sam and Don, the Sebastiani Winery inaugurated the French custom of making a nouveau wine, for release classically Nov. 15, only weeks after the harvest, in Beaujolais style.

Every vintage since has seen this wine improve with fresh and fragrant charms, a tart, almost cranberry zing, introduced with showmanship and fanfare, golden trumpets, men in velvet robes, in singular showmanship. Grapes come from vineyards near and far, qualifying for "North Coast Counties" appellation for the vintaged varietals. Recently, a Chardonnay came home from the fair with a gold medal.

The original 501-gallon redwood tank is still in service, and one of the features shown to the thousands of visitors who throng the winery daily throughout the year.

•

THE TRANSITION FROM old-fashioned, traditional winemaking procedures to the present technology of stainless steel, costly centrifuges for cleaning the must prior to fermentation, a multimillion-dollar investment was a family decision, to which too much credit cannot be given to Sam and Don Sebastiani.

Though he was ever-present in his neatly pressed bib overalls, Gus was never one to take on the airs and graces sometimes associated with one of his wealth and position. He enjoyed his life as a winemaker. His rambling Spanish-style home in the nearby foothills was close enough for a commanding view of the vineyard and winery.

Don Sebastiani, we understand, is a candidate for the state Assembly. With the same vigor and drive of his father and grandfather, even if ultimately elected, it is safe to say that he will continue the dynamic leadership and direction of the winery, with his brother Sam.

•

PIONEER-BUILT California wineries, and many of them remain — Inglenook, Beaulieu, Concannon, Louis M. Martini, Wente, Mirassou, Buena Vista, Charles Krug, Schramsberg, Korbel, Paul Masson, Beringer and Sebastiani — are a part of our indigenous cultural heritage.

Some of the wineries listed remain in ownership of the founding families. Others have taken up the traditions to carry on.

The names are instantly recognizable as a part of the California wine scene. It has represented the dreams and investment of the lives of those founders, their products being something successive generations all across the land have taken into their homes.

•

IT IS, OF COURSE, with sadness that we learned of the death of August Sebastiani, with whom we have shared the trials and tribulations of many vintage years, but also its equally constant joys and triumphs.

In marking those final dates, 1914-1980, into the record of his personal history, not only the surviving children and grandchildren can take comfort in this continuing Sebastiani legend, but all of us who are certain to continue enjoying Sebastiani wines in the decades to come.

The Spring Horse Show, the first event of the horse show season, will attract approximately 200 riders from the Monterey and San Francisco bay areas who will compete in equestrian events for riders of all ages and levels of horsemanship on Sunday, March 16 at the Pebble Beach Equestrian Center. The competition continues from 8:30 a.m.-5 p.m.; spectators are welcome at no charge.

Previously known as the Winter Horse Show, the event had originally been scheduled March 8 but was moved up by Abby and Jay Foss, who took over management of the center from Richard Collins at the beginning of this year.

"We plan to have 33 equestrian classes at this show," said Mrs. Foss. "This includes complete divisions for children, junior hunters, pre-green, green adult amateur and working hunters. A special event will be the junior mini-grand prix and the adult mini-grand prix planned at the end of the day.

The show opens with dressage tests followed by jumper classes. Jumps for the easiest classes are set at 1'6" but may go well over 4' in the Four Bar class, where fences are set at 2'6" and raised each time two or more horses score a clean round.

Expected to participate in the Spring Horse Show is last year's High Point Champion, Tracy Keaton of Pebble Beach.

Judges for the horse show will be Dr. and Mrs. William Niseen of Walnut Creek. Making selections in the dressage suitability division will be Janet Garwood of Pebble Beach.

The Equestrian Center is on 17 Mile Drive just beyond The Lodge at Pebble Beach. Although there is no charge for admisison to the horse show, the $4-per-car gate fee into Del Monte Forest will be in effect. A snack bar will be in operation throughout the day.

For more information, phone 624-2756.

New pesticides to be discussed

New pesticide regulations at the state and national level will be the lecture topic of Dr. Betty Davis Wednesday, March 19 at the conservation meeting of the local Ventana Chapter of the Sierra Club. The free program begins at 7:30 p.m. in the Community Room of the Monterey Public Library, 625 Pacific St., Monterey; everyone is welcome to attend.

In addition, community leaders will participate in the discussion of the use of pesticides in Monterey County and their effect on the agricultural industry. A local agricultural cropduster will discuss the issue with the environmentalists.

Emerald Isle is subject of Explorama travelogue

The emerald land of leprechauns and legends will be the focus of the Explorama travel-adventure film Ireland to be screened Thursday and Friday, March 13-14 at Sunset Theater, Carmel. Producer Robert Davis will personally narrate the film each evening beginning at 8:15 p.m.

"The Irish people are the wittiest, most literary and fun-loving people on earth," is the opinion of filmmaker Davis. He recently returned from a six-month filming expedition in Ireland where he traveled throughout the ancient land focusing his camera on the daily lives of the Irish people, their history and legends.

Davis's film begins with a brief history of Ireland examining the table-stones that the Neolithic people built to honor their dead and the Ring Forts of stone dating from the time of the Celts in 600 B.C.

Davis testifies that Ireland is more than history, natural and man-made wonders, "its greatest and most fascinating wonders are its people." Most of the film examines the Irish people showing them at their daily activities. Willy McNellis, a weaver of Donegal tweed; frolicking Irish at a singing pub; a visit to Puck Fair where a goat is king for a day; and Aran Isles ladies knitting sweaters.

Ireland also takes the armchair traveler up the 2,500-foot mountain, Croagh Patrick, which St. Patrick climbed. His religious works, burial place, impressive High Crosses, carved with stories of the Old and New Testament, St. Patrick's Bell, the Chalice of Ardagh and the Brooch of Tara are shown.

Robert Davis, a lecturer, cinematographer and film producer, began filming while he was still in elementary school in Kansas City, Mo. Later, he worked for Calvin Film Productions and since 1951 has been producing his own travel documentary films throughout the world. He travels more than 40,000 miles each year in the United States and Canada, appearing in person to narrate his programs.

During the production of his film he shot footage in Dublin, Belfast, at the Giant Causeway, Trinity College, Cork in Yeats country, the Killarney area, at the Royal Dublin Horse Show and in rural areas of Ireland.

Reserved seat tickets, at $4.50, are available at Macy's in Del Monte Center and Abinante Music, Monterey, or at the door on the night of the screening.

Arts and the older American

By RICHARD TYLER
Director, Sunset Center Community and Cultural Affairs

THE HOUSE SUBCOMMITTEE on Human Services recently held a hearing on "Arts and the Older American" at which several distinguished Americans spoke of the need for greater support for arts programs for elder citizens.

Fabulous Alberta Hunter — whose jazz-pop singing at 85 years of age sets something of a standard for quality at an advanced age — sang for the session; and if she isn't enough to demonstrate the value of staying creatively alive forever, no politician can ever be impressed by anyone.

Speakers of national importance included Joan Mondale, honorary chairman of the Federal Council on the Arts and Humanities, and actor-singer Theodore Bikel. Livingston Biddle, chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts, and regional representatives also were to be heard.

The issue is timely and important. Almost everyone will support programs in the arts for the young, but what about the millions of Americans who grew up without any educational introduction or personal discovery of the arts? In a recent article on the death of Andre Kostelanetz, the story was told of a woman in her 60s who felt she was too ignorant to understand "good" music. Later in life she discovered that all she needed was proper exposure to music so she could enjoy it "better late than never."

Adult education programs generally attract those in their middle years who recognize the need to enrich their lives through education. Too often, however, those near retirement find themselves devoid of outside interests and spend days and years of mere existence without the beauty and insights of the arts.

The current riches on television's Public Broadcast System and National Public Radio, as well as a growing selection of quality viewing and listening on commercial stations, offer invaluable opportunities to reach out to millions who have never known the beauties of great art.

•

A FEW WEEKS ago a very dear friend died after a decade of limiting his activities because of Parkinson's disease. Peter had traveled the world and had a natural and trained appreciation for all of the arts.

Thanks to national television and radio, my friend and millions of similar house-bound individuals, enjoyed many of the riches that we all take for granted. Thus, we "shared" the opening night Met Opera Otello, Pavarotti with Mehta and the Philharmonic, and dozens of radio concerts every year. Chicago and New York were linked by the magic of electronics; and one of America's older citizens was able to continue to share in the wonders of great music, dance and drama. My friend was fortunate because disease and old age found him richly prepared for a more quiet but definitely not boring manner of living.

The concern of Congress and all service agencies should be to find new, exciting ways to bring millions of people to the potential appreciation and enjoyment of the arts. Subcommittee members will surely discover that not enough is being done.

Too many elderly persons have devoted too many years to merely earning a living. The arts provide the potential to add meaning and inspiration to years past, present and future. It is good that at least one committee is giving its attention to so important a cause.

THE NINTH ANNUAL ensemble competition of the Chamber Music Society of the Monterey Peninsula will take place on Saturday afternoon, March 15, at 1 p.m. in the Sunset Theater. This competition, which is intended to encourage ensemble playing by young musicians, is one of the very few in the country that have this aim. The maximum age limit is 26 years old. Three prizes are given: $1,000 first, $500 second and $250 third.

Past competitions have attracted groups of young musicians of remarkable ability and the judges, who have listened to tapes submitted by this year's contestants, report that the quality this time should be as high as ever.

Coordinating judge for the competition is Oleg Kovalenko, Russian-born violinist and conductor, who studied with Munch and Kubelik, and was recently Resident Conductor of the Indianapolis Symphony. The other judges are Adolph Baller, internationally known pianist and chamber music artist who now teaches at Stanford University and the San Francisco Conservatory of Music; Ray Fabrizio, principal flutist of the Monterey County Symphony and the Bear Valley Festival Orchestra, who is on the faculty of the Monterey Peninsula College;

Edward Haug, principal trumpeter of the Marin County Symphony and the Carmel Bach Festival Orchestra, member of the faculty of the San Francisco Conservatory of Music, and the Monterey Peninsula Community School of Music;

Stefan Krayk, well-known violinist, concertmaster of the Santa Barbara Symphony and the Bear Valley Festival Orchestra, former member of the Paganini String Quartet, currently teaching at the California Institute of the Arts in Valencia.

The Saturday competition is open to the public free of charge. On Sunday, March 16, at 3 p.m., the awards will be presented; and the three winners will perform in concert. Seats for the Awards Concert will be available at the box office at $4.50 regular admission and $2.50 for students and enlisted military personnel. For more information, phone 624-2993.

On Monday, March 17, the Principia College Singers will present a program of choral music. Tickets can be purchased at the door for $2. Students will be admitted free.

The Watsonville Band will pay their annual visit to Sunset Theater on Wednesday, March 19, when they will perform in the theater at 8 p.m. There is no admission charge.

Backgammon

by Alfred Sheinwold

SHORT MOVE FIRST

You, White, roll 6-2 in the diagrammed position. How do you play it?

A fast player takes the six by bearing a man off the 4-point; and he then looks for a safe four. He must leave a blot on his 1-point or his 2-point.

The cautious player doesn't leave a blot. He moves the two before he takes the six. That is, he moves first from the 4-point to the 2-point. Then he takes the six by bearing a man off the 3-point.

White may eventually have to leave a blot, but it is foolish to leave a blot unnecessarily.

Would you like to have Alfred Sheinwold teach you how to play backgammon? A 12-lesson booklet will be on the way to you when you send 50 cents plus a stamped, self-addressed, No. 10 envelope to Backgammon, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1000, Los Angeles, Calif. 90053.

A theater that belongs to children

Lapham Foundation.

Many individuals who understand the impact of theater on the young people and school districts of Monterey County also contribute.

An important fund-raising arm of CET is the Staff Players Repertory Company. It was founded 10 years ago when parents of CET students expressed a desire to perform.

"We are the original shoestring theater," Marcia laughs.

•

MARCIA GAMBRELL HOVICK is an imaginative woman whose aspirations for CET are boundless yet bound by the realities of funding its expansion. Her major goal is to expand the touring companies, enlarge the number of casts and perhaps travel to regions beyond the county boundary.

"If we could have more people we could do more touring. We have only been held back from enlarging by our budget," she says, while she vows, "We certainly aren't going to sacrifice quality!"

The Children's Experimental Theatre is far from a one-woman operation. As important to the actors as their costumes is Loel Shuler, costume designer and assistant director who joined CET three years after its inception.

Due to a limited budget, new materials cannot be purchased with each production and often the apparel is a collection of donated odds and ends. Those rags "have been transformed into incredibly beautiful costumes because of the genius of Mrs. Shuler," claims Marcia.

Just as Mrs. Shuler makes certain that the actors are properly clad, Bill Lewis, who directs scenery and lighting, "always puts the performer at the center of what he's doing," she says. "And he is wonderful at designing movable, tourable and durable scenery, that does not disintegrate after two or three trips to various schools," she adds.

•

THERE ARE NO TYPICAL days for a woman totally immersed in the creative and administrative operations of a children's theater. Her schedule may include taking 30 or 40 phone calls, Staff Player rehearsals at mid-day, preparing for the spring plays and rehearsing the four casts of children who are touring.

In addition to directing CET and the Staff Players' productions, Mrs. Hovick is a prolific writer. "I've been writing all my life. My special skills are in the field of writing for the theater." Though she has never counted the number of plays she has penned, Marcia estimates that they number three or four dozen.

MARCIA HAS A special place in the heart of David McLemore of Seaside and the other children who study at CET to learn the art of dramatics as well as an exuberant approach to communication. (Alan McEwen photo)

She insists that many children's plays are devoid of character and talk down to youngsters. "To work with a script where they have to learn new words and 'stretch' is valuable. The kids are always willing to stretch."

Always on the fringes of her mind is the idea that theater reaches children. She observes that the "life of children gets a lot of lip service." She does not intend to pay them less than their due.

•

MOST IMPORTANT, she says, are the families of these children who encourage their youngsters to strive forward. "We have had marvelous kids from perceptive and sensitive and far-sighted families who could see for themselves what skills and confidence and pure enjoyment their youngsters were deriving."

Theatre review

Gershwin at Wharf

By MARC RIVETTE

WHEN THEATRICAL PEOPLE get together around a piano in someone's home and have a go at singing and dancing, the results can be quite entertaining. Part of the fascination is in knowing the performers on the straight stage as actors. And there are bound to be surprises.

The Wharf Theatre, recently reopened under the management of Angelo DiGirolamo, is presenting Sweet and Low-Down, subtitled the New Gershwin Revue. The first surprise is the plethora of Broadway shows that the Gershwins — George and Ira — had a hand in. They range from the very familiar to tunes that I am sure no one has heard before.

The five performers are aware of this, too, for they make a point of doing some numbers that have perhaps been well forgotten. But in bringing them back, they perform the exhumation with a great deal of deft poking fun.

A number called Blah-Blah-Blah, if you can believe that there is such a song, is admirably done by Harrison Shields, with his tongue in cheek, which takes a bit of doing since he is singing at the same time. Shields is one of the discoveries of this show. I was delighted to hear a fine and pleasant tenor voice, just right for musical comedy scores.

La Vonne Rae Andrews was less of a surprise for I have heard her work, as was the case with Gina Welch.

Andrews has always been able to lay down a sophisticated song pretty well, but in this gamut of Gershwin, she shows more versatility than before. Gina Welch makes quite a production of My Man's Gone Now from Porgy and Bess, managing to tug a heart string or two.

Two performers I had not heard before were Renee Suberi and Barney Hulse. Their duet of Let's Call the Whole Thing Off was a high point of comedy. Suberi chose to do her lines with a Charro-Spanish accent which tickled the house.

•

A WORD MUST BE said here about the pianist-accompanist, Jason Anderson. He managed a big, full sound, and only rarely did one wish for perhaps the inclusion of drums or a bass fiddle. All in all, he is an excellent accompanist, supporting the singers to bring out the best of each number.

The rest of the cast kept the interest from flagging by quick and varied changes of costume — from dinner jackets and evening gowns to college sweaters and slacks.

The scenery, with its usable staircase, platforms and upper stage, with the arches outlined with miniature lights, struck just the right note of sophistication for the whole evening.

The audience responded with nostalgia, even inspiring one woman in the audience to romantically paw her husband. His response to the show, perhaps because of her, was a little more guarded. The rest of the audience, however, burst into loud applause and even bravos. So, all in all, they were having a good time.

It is almost impossible for a show such as this — short of bringing in bathing beauties wrapped in the American flag — to have a climactic second act but the five performers did their best and almost brought it off.

Is A Problem Drinker Hurting You?

• Read Every Word

If a problem drinker is hurting you, you can be sure he's hurting himself too – or herself. Alcoholism does not respect sex, age or color. How long can you go on? If you're ready to do something about it, remember this. . you can help the alcoholic even if he or she doesn't want help.

• What Not to Do

Don't accuse – he or she will never admit to drinking too much. Don't try to reason with the problem drinker. Alcohol abusers are seriously ill, and the illness affects the mind as well as the body.

• What You Can Do

The best thing (and really the only thing) you can do for problem drinkers is to get them to professional help. Fast. The CareUnit Program in your local hospital offers a unique program that works. Given the right environment and an effective treatment program, alcoholism is a treatable disease. We prove it every day. In a few weeks, the problem drinker can look forward to resuming a useful and productive place in society. And you can look forward to a happy, normal life once again.

• How to Begin

Begin by calling your local CareUnit immediately, and talk to a staff counselor. You alone can help the alcoholic. Call now and make an appointment to see a counselor. You needn't be hurt again.

Etchings of Southwest on exhibit at San Carlos Gallery

An exhibit of etchings of the southwest plains and people by Arizona artist Norma Andraud may be viewed through March 31 at the San Carlos Gallery, located at San Carlos between Seventh and Eighth, Carmel.

Born in Arizona, she transfers her feeling for the traditional Southwest to her embossed etchings by carefully researching "family relationships, structure of buildings and patterns of rugs and jewelry," she says. Her meticulous attitude is also reflected in the materials that she uses for her prints — special inks from France, computer paper to wipe a plate clean and handmade Ph balanced paper for embossing.

At the age of 16, Andraud received the only scholarship awarded annually by the Traphagen School of Design in New York. She became a freelance fashion illustrator and soon moved to Europe where she studied at the Beaux Arts. While in France, she worked in the Paris headquarters of Women's Wear Daily and in her spare time sketched the surrounding French landscape. These were exhibited at one-woman shows at several French art galleries.

She met Robert Andraud and married him in 1966 before returning to the United States to make a home in Arizona.

She says there are times now when she works day and night searching for perfection. Each etching requires 50 drawings, she says, before they are considered acceptable by her standards. Often 25 color changes are required for an embossing.

"One has to have a good sense of design, and in order to create one must destroy," she claims.

The etchings of Norma Andraud may be viewed Tuesday through Saturday from 10:30 a.m.-5:30 a.m.

For more information, phone 624-6281.

Brazilian film to be screened at college March 18-19

Macunaima, a Brazilian black comedy about a dwarf who is transformed into a handsome prince, will be screened Tuesday and Wednesday, March 18-19 by the Monterey Peninsula Film Gallery. The program begins at 8:15 p.m. at the S.F.B. Morse Auditorium, 425 Van Buren St., Monterey.

Directed by Joaquin Pedro de Andrade, the 1972 film examines the odyssey of Macunaima, a hideous black dwarf who is born full grown in the Brazilian jungle. When he is miraculously transformed into a handsome prince, Macunaima migrates to the big city where he has an affair with a beautiful urban guerrilla, and a subsequent encounter with a wealthy capitalist who happens to be a giant cannibal. Director Andrade uses the theme of cannibalism to describe Brazil, a country he sees as devouring itself.

Influenced by the Marx Brothers, the Macunaima was described as "surreal, a biting and passionate tragicomedy of whites and blacks," by the Village Voice.

The Monterey Peninsula Film Society is a non-profit organization dedicated to bringing landmark films to the area.

Admission is $3, general; $2.50 for students and seniors; and $2 for film society members.

Mission curator Harry Downie dies at 76

Funeral services will be conducted today (Thursday) for Henry John Downie of Carmel, well-known curator and restorer of the Carmel Mission.

Mr. Downie died Monday, March 10, at his home after a brief illness. He was 76.

A Mass of Christian burial will be celebrated at 11 a.m. today (Thursday) in the Carmel Mission Basilica.

Mr. Downie, who was known as Harry, was born Aug. 25, 1903 in San Francisco. He came to Carmel in 1931 to work on the restoration of the mission.

When he arrived in Carmel, the mission consisted only of waist-high ruins, except for the church building. The walls, ceilings, furniture and early mission atmosphere all have been restored through his work.

Mr. Downie also helped in the restoration of other missions, including San Antonio, Soledad, Santa Clara, San Juan Bautista, San Luis Obispo and San Buenaventura. He was serving as consultant on the upcoming restoration of Mission San Jose in Fremont at the time of his death.

He also served as consultant on the restoration of several Monterey historical buildings, including Fremont House, Colton Hall, Osio Adobe and others in Salinas and San Juan Bautista.

Mr. Downie became interested in mission history in his youth when he attended Mission Dolores in his home parish in San Francisco before coming to Carmel. His skills as a cabinet maker were to serve him well in his lifelong devotion to the missions of California.

His restoration work at the Carmel Mission included cataloging the art treasures, the church appointments and all the books in the vast church collection.

He also served as the mission bellringer for 43 years until 1972, after which he played only on special occasions.

He once said that one of his greatest moments was the exhumation of Father Junipero Serra in 1943, after which Mr. Downie became a member of the Canonical Inquiry of the Cause of Serra.

In 1954 he was named to the knighthood of St. Gregory the Great by Pope Pius XII in honor of his restoration work.

His numerous awards and honors include the Knight of Castle Belvere by King Juan Carlos of Spain in 1976 and the Royal Knight Commander of Isabella la Catolica of Spain by Franco in 1948.

He was named Monterey Peninsula Chamber of Commerce "Man of the Year" in 1968 and was presented by his native San Francisco with a key to the city in 1964. Numerous other societies and organizations have honored Mr. Downie, including the California Historical Society, which presented him with an award of merit.

He is survived by his wife, Mabel, and daughters, Miriam and Ann Marie, all of Carmel.

The family suggested memorial gifts may be made to the Good Shepherd Lutheran Home in Terra Bella.

The Mission Mortuary is in charge of funeral arrangements.

HELEN H. STEELE

Helen H. Steele, a longtime Carmel resident, died Tuesday, March 4, at Silas B. Hays Army Hospital, Fort Ord, following a period of failing health. She was 88.

A native of San Diego, she was born Feb. 1, 1892.

Mrs. Steele lived in Carmel 20 years before moving to Honolulu some years ago. She returned to Carmel six years ago.

She is survived by a daughter, Peggy Schissell of Carmel.

Private cremation was handled by the Paul Mortuary at the Little Chapel by the Sea.

Monterey birds lecture topic

Sea Birds of the Monterey Bay will be the lecture topic of Bruce Elliot of the California Department of Fish and Game on Thursday, March 13 at the general meeting of the Monterey Peninsula Audubon Society. Everyone is welcome to attend the free program at 7:30 p.m. at the Canterbury Woods Auditorium, 651 Sinex Ave., Pacific Grove.

Elliot will discuss the rich avifauna of the bay and the information he has gathered from surveys conducted during the past few years.

Father Farrell's Wisdom

World problems caused by communication gap

By the REV. LARRY FARRELL

The invocation delivered to the United Voluntary Services National Convention, Monterey Peninsula Country Club.

O Lord be our help and guide; may our love for Thee express itself in our eagerness to do good to others.

Learned philosophers tell us that many of our problems are caused by a lack of communication. So many of us just don't get the word. That is why you in United Voluntary Services are so unique and so exceptional. You do not merely talk about Christianity—you put it into action.

You realize that no horse gets anywhere until he is harnessed; your voluntary services are focused, dedicated and disciplined.

Our Blessed Lord told us in no uncertain terms that if we wish to serve Him we must serve our neighbor. "Whatsoever ye do to these the least of my brethren, that ye do unto me."

When I was hungry, you gave me to eat; when I was thirsty you gave me to drink; when I was weary you helped me find rest; when I was anxious, you calmed all my fears. In a strange country, you made me at home; seeking employment, you found me a job. Hurt in battle you bound up my wounds; searching for kindness you held out your hand. When I angered you bothered to smile; when I was restless you listened and cared. When I was laughed at you stood by my side; when I was happy you shared in my joy. Now enter into the home of my Father.

Let us always remember, O Lord, that love wasn't put into our heart to stay. Love isn't love until we give it away.

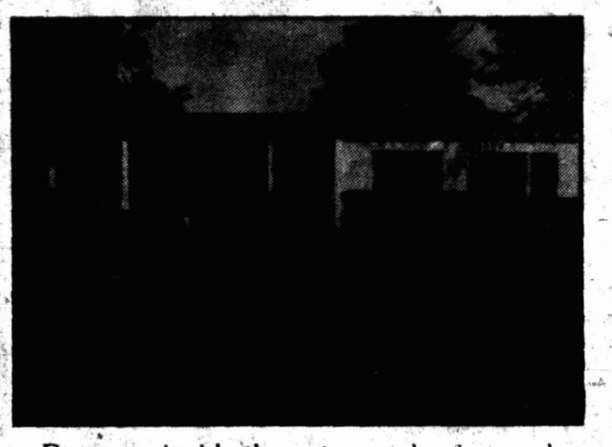
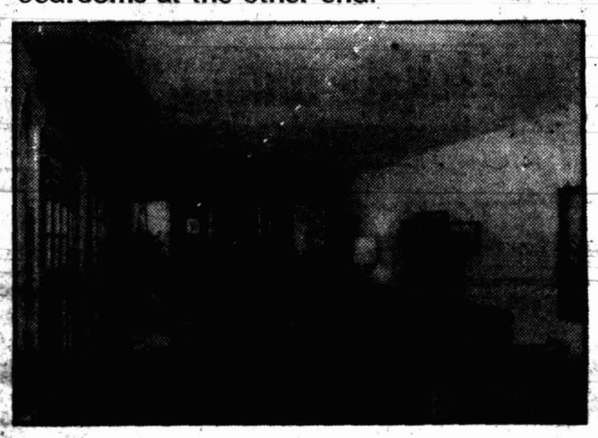
Behind the Great Cypress

The fence at first is a trifle forbidding. It separates this lovely home from its quiet street and from one of Carmel's most majestic cypress trees.



But once inside the gate, you begin to value the fence. You're in a charmingly private grassy garden, a warm yellow house before you, with flush siding, lots of white trim, shake roof and a wide veranda.

Just inside the dutch front door is the long, carpeted living room; paneled wall with fireplace and flanking windows at one end; picture windows facing the front garden; openings to kitchen, dining room and bedrooms at the other end.



The dining room also faces front, and another dutch door opens to the veranda. Floor is brick, there are wide windows, and a large kitchen opens across a tiled service bar. At the east end is a pleasant den or sewing room, and behind it a laundry and utility room.

The two bedrooms face the rear and are reached by a small hallway off the living room. The master bedroom, on the east, has sliding doors to a paved rear patio and a beautifully landscaped back yard: hedges, pathways, flower beds, grassy plots — all carefully manicured. Master bath is restricted to this room, and a second bath is back up the hallway. The west bedroom also faces the rear garden. Both bedrooms are carpeted and draped.

Taylor Road is a little traveled street off Atherton Drive at the southern end of Hatton Fields. It's only 2 blocks long, and houses along its short stretch are very nice, indeed. It's close to Carmel Rancho Shopping Center, Highway 1, the Mission and schools. A very comfortable address at 3383 Taylor Road. $169,500.
